Stars of the Lid-Articulate Silences (Part 2)

Great album to listen to if you're sad and down. Because yes, I think listening to sad music when sad is better than listening to happy music because you're sad. Never found that making any sense to me.

happy music because you're sad. Never found that making any sense to me.

When in a depressed mood, it's much more satisfying to indulge in your melancholy than to try to force yourself to be happy. I agree.

Of course this kind of music can also MAKE you sad, but yeah. Which it's kinda doing for me. Maybe not sad, but making me feel a little down. And I love when music has an emotional effect on me in some way, even if it makes me go like "Holy crap this is dark and messed up as hell" like some albums do for me.

I was just surprised to see ambient music so highly rated. A lot of the time ambient music, especially on a 2 hour long album, I see get classified as "boring" no matter what and people move on from there.

Oh yeah mind, think of this as someone trying to find an exit out of their depression and it never arriving, that'll help.

I've actually had family members before tell me I should listen to more happy music. Even one said something like "It gets to you after a while". That actually made me irritated. That apparently listening to sad music or watching a sad movie will suddenly get to me? Doesn't make any sense. It's the kind of music I tend to enjoy. And while I may not be the cheeriest of people, I wouldn't exactly consider myself a sad, depressed person because I listen to sad music and find that sad movies tend to be better than happy movies, especially ones with stupid forced happy endings.

Agreed, all it does is make me annoyed. Sad music is relatable when you're sad; it's empathetic.

But I definitely don't need to be happy to listen to happy music, either. Or sad to listen to sad music. Since right now I'm just kinda "normal", which seems to be how I am 90% of the time, and listening to sad music.

I did have one time I was happy so I was listening to happy music, though. It was snowing for the first time of the year and it made me feel good, so I added happy music onto it. Because yes, it snowing makes me happy. I guess that's what happens when you grow up in South Lake Tahoe, California, where 6 feet of snow on the ground at once wasn't a weird thing. In fact, the lack of snow I saw in pictures this year was creepy, because I'm so used to all the snow there.

Also, 1 to 2 feet of snow IN ONE STORM wasn't out of the question, either...

Snow instantly improves my mood. Makes me want to listen to more happy music too (not Christmas music though, or not usually ☐ ). It's weird, usually winter is associated with being sad and depressed, and summer is the opposite. But it's the other way around for me, I hate summer. ☐

Here in south-central Texas, we get school cancelled if there's even the tiniest bit of sleet or ice and everyone freaks out. The most snow I've ever had here was like 3 inches in 2011 and we were out of school for a whole week. I remember listening to Immortal while walking through that little bit of snow, feeling like a frostbitten northern warrior..... it was only 30 degrees outside ☐ Our perception of "cold" is skewed down here

I think this past winter, the only time the schools were closed were when the wind chills were like, -30 F. And even then they would sometimes keep them open. Chicago is used to the snow and freezing cold. ☐

I'm listening to the last rockabilly songs in those conditions. Immortal and the like kick in once there's over 10 inches of snow ☐
But then again, I'm not in south Texas.

Screw these, I'll add songs to my phone. I'll just mute foobar and keep it scrobbling the stuff while I listen to 10-15 sec pieces to decide which songs to add to my phone.

I hate Christmas music. I know most people would stab my eyes out for saying that, but I hate Christmas music. Well, hate is a strong word, but ugh. Rarely do I like Christmas music.

It's weird, usually winter is associated with being sad and depressed, and summer is the opposite. But it's the other way around for me, I hate summer. □

Summers the most overrated season in my opinion. I prefer every other season over summer. I understand why people love it who go to school, but me? Give me snow. Give me beautiful spring growth. Gimme fall colors. Screw this summer thing.

I think part of this has to do with me living in mostly cold places my whole life....And summers in South Lake Tahoe are more tolerable than here. 80 degrees in California is a whole different story than 80 up here. Humidity makes all the difference...

At least it's not Florida, though....Ugh. Watched Top Gear go there and it was like 90's with 80% humidity.

Strangely that seems to happen up here, too, despite the fact that we do get snow at least once every year down at this level (200 foot elevation). Though every now and then, like last year, the snow is sadly lacking. And what we had was tiny little sprinkles of it. But give an inch or so? Pretty freak out. It's like...it happens yearly people, come on.

The best is when we have 5 inch's and nobody else has any....Weird convergent zone stuff happens here. It can be snowy as hell here but an hour 1/2 away in Seattle? Nothing.

Also, speaking of frostbitten, I've had some fun weather cold stories related to that, too. My dad said that in South Lake Tahoe, one night when it was like, -14 (Yes, -14), he saw someone jogging outside...shirtless.

That was a REALLY cold time ,though. It gets cold there but not usually THAT cold.

I think the coldest we've had here (Washington) was 1 degrees. Another time it was 8. Went outside for the hell of it to see how it felt, instantly got cold, and went back inside. We usually get one week a year where it never gets above 30 degrees, or settles around 30 degrees for that entire time but barely gets above freezing. Actually late last year was weird ,because he had like a month where it didn't get below freezing but it didn't get warmer than 40, either....And that was before winter....Also, there was quite a lacking of rain...up until March when it dumped record rainfall and caused one of the worst mudslides in state history (Which was an hour away from where I live)

Now Maine is a whole different story....Some of the coldest and most insane weather I've ever had came from that state. First time we had a tornado watch somewhere we lived (Had a basement, so yeah), which ended up destroying an old barn somewhere. Some of the craziest lightning I've ever seen was there. Including getting our answering machine fried one night. And a tree electrocuted practically in our back forest (Across the potato fields). Top it all off? There was quite a bit of snow there, and -30 wasn't unheard of. There was kind of a reason we only stayed there for a year 1/2.

I could keep rambling about stories but yeah...
