Out of all the clichés, I think the more frustrating (and extremely ironic because of who I got it from) thing that personally got me annoyed was being called generic for using Sims 4 (with mods and add-ons, mind ya). I can't help it when art ain't my forte.

When art isn't your forte, you have to resort to a character creator in games.

These hurt on a physical level for me.

Guilty as charged in the past for 1. Partially guilty for 2; I spent an unnecessary sentence instead. 4...Well, yes. Fight me.

As for 3...

In PMT one of the canon engagements of my combat mages involved violently shutting down such a school. Does that count?

A traumatized, but recovering, MT-PMT constitutional monarchy consisting of a personal union of Prussia and Poland. A land of rampant gun ownership, governmental schizophrenia, militias with enough heavy weapons to turn an armored division into a badly-shaken battalion of light infantry, and terrified USAF personnel counting down the days until they rotate back home.

Weaponization rate(14 weapons per person) and crime rate(1.77 crimes per hour) both canon. Cry about it.

To my defense, please see page 71 of this thread....

I'm forced to use anime or draw my own characters. I can't really be realistic even if I wanted to, when it comes to depicting creatures that don't exist IRL, that is. I admit that there's a whole bunch of anime styles and design artists that get underappreciated, some anything but generic or saccharine looking.

The way Range Murata draws men and the 90s Patlabor movies, for example. If one wants to be "serious", but even then, there's only so much that Google Images can do. It's all quite restrictive if one wants to be specific.

To add on to what Fahren said as well, can definitely vouch that anime doesn't necessarily mean death / bad for your factbooks or info. If you can establish a foothold of yourself with a pretty nice concept that everyone can get behind, keep on being you. ♥

I have a mix of artstyles because me - I took inspiration from a lot of sources, my credits list is pretty large.

Well yeah, they did say that it's not the tropes, it's how you use 'em.

I'm just voicing out pent-up frustrations. I'm pretty sure you understand how pressing it sometimes is to depict things or people that aren't, well, everyday sights. Even if they're mostly human-looking in shape and form. And then you run the risk of being called generic if they look too normal.

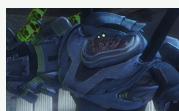

Mad props to people who actually try to write xeno-fiction.

Oh, you bet I do! I have my fair share of frustration because "Ohh, anime, yuck." (I have 1-2 characters from an anime. One's from SAO, another's... I think that was just art, don't know where it's from), and another because "Overwatch, yuck." Goodness forbid you that you can't like TF2 and Overwatch both (like with DC or Marvel, CoD or BF, and many many more).

Oh, right, where was I. Anime characters won't look too great when they are turned into real people, but there's nothing stopping them from existing together with actual people. Who Framed Roger Rabbit? is a good epitome of cartoon + real life!

If it were up to me, I'd use illustrations on all the images in my factbooks, to make things seem more consistent....and not Roger Rabbit-y (I like the concept and enjoy the movie, but I'm just kinda nitpicky with established lore to try that); but eh, Google Search can only do so much with it's specificity (or lack of) and I can't draw everything.

I know that pain. Google Images, Pinterest, DeviantArt, Tumblr... they can only give you so many things. Some concepts and depictions sadly only exist in our head, as in it's not because it's far-fetched, but turns out it's pretty hard to Google search "Japanese cartoon character smiling and having a cup of coffee in a solarpunk world."

Here's an NS military building cliché. People who use only American equipment because they think it's the best. Never mind that a lot of the time it's also stuff that America doesn't even export, and sometimes it's really not that great compared to equipment from other Western countries intended for the same role. And if they want to be a bad guy they'll just use Russian equipment which to be fair makes a little more sense.

A secular, Tajik dominated state in Central Asia which has experienced 40 years of democratic backsliding. NS stats are NOT used.

To be honest, I never registered that as a cliché because I haven't seen too many people do it on NS in the past. I believe you and one other person have done it according to my recollection, and your character concepts are so unique that, even if it was more common, I still wouldn't really want to call it a cliché. Not that clichés are even bad. It just doesn't seem applicable to your world-building or role-playing in my mind.

"City inside giant flying saucer" is what got me pulling my hairs once, though sometimes you discover things that seem weirdly niche...like Alexander Weygers' concept art for his flying saucer inventions. Or Akai Sashimi, some Pixiv artist who specifically draws catgirls maids in Victorian uniforms, working or serving prehistoric creatures, or eating them.

With me I just use domestically manufactured stuff. Doesn't really have a image or idea in my head of what form or shape it's gonna be in only a vague idea and what purpose and role. That said, since I have no idea on aesthetics I'd likely use domestic made copies of Russian, Chinese, American, Finnish and Dutch etc. equipment because I'm too lazy.

Like I said, cliché isn't necessarily as synonymous with bad in my view. I think a couple of the clichés I mentioned can have some merit when used in a creative or innovative context. Or because they can be good old fashion fun in the right role-playing community.

With the magical high school one, I was more thinking of that being the premise of an entire RP. Think Elfen High and all the copycat role-plays that popped up. Yes, they were super cliché, but a lot of them were fun or quirky too.

I don't think so? I mean, I wouldn't mind if I get called that, but it just a few that has quite that seething dislike for a game or two. Not that I care because I fit into "I enjoy almost every game" - from multiplayer only shooters, to RPGs, to survival horror. 🍷

Something about Overwatch = Overrated. Their opinions, of course (I also never got back into the game; too chaotic) but goddamn, I hate getting smacked with that treatment just because of 1-2 characters or my concepts revolving around that. Fortunately, that seems to be on the decline.

At least I didn't really have a Fortnite character... Yet.

Another cliché/trope possibly? Nations with no NS Stats badges aside from maybe residency, population, etc. I know I know, NS Stats not used, disregarded, all of that fluff, BUT come onnnn - get those shiny gold badges.

You'll get my Meowwellow approval!

I mean, Russian equipment is totally valid if it's sort of ex-Soviet and the nation is/was Communist. People shouldn't be restricted from using certain equipment which canonically makes sense because they feel it's a cliché.

Hm. I wonder who that could be?

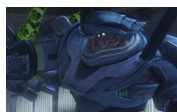

Generally, a big thing to note (which a lot of Fahrnan's points entail) is that a lot of people like to project their own standards over their nations, and have them work perfectly. Someone who supports the British Empire and plays as a British Empire nation will obviously seem to have flawlessly-managed colonies (which of course, isn't how it worked in real life).

A trope, or a lack of one, actually...

A surprising lack of mention/worldbuilding on the fictional city of Atlantis. I mean, sure it doesn't exist outside, but come on, you got the whole of NS now, make a fictional nation outta it.

Or better yet, mix it up with the German/Roman/Soviet bits.

A trope, or a lack of one, actually...

A surprising lack of mention/worldbuilding on the fictional city of Atlantis. I mean, sure it doesn't exist outside, but come on, you got the whole of NS now, make a fictional nation outta it.

Inverted Atlantis has even sorta been done, but no major straight-and-out Atlantis nations!

Don't Forget the Mermaids! (Though you don't have to constantly bring them up either!)

Here's an NS military building cliché. People who use only American equipment because they think it's the best. Never mind that a lot of the time it's also stuff that America doesn't even export, and sometimes it's really not that great compared to equipment from other Western countries intended for the same role. And if they want to be a bad guy they'll just use Russian equipment which to be fair makes a little more sense.
