Similar to my reply to Zantaliao, why they are an active regular, they haven't really done much to gain fame on the forums, they are plenty active and you see them around quite a lot, but they haven't been a regular long enough for the ordinary F7er to see them as a part of F7 culture. Fairly well known, mid-6s.

It shouldn't really surprise me that the average F7er's metric for gauging how well known someone is always through how "many times they've seen that particular user", but it still irks my irks my soul every time it happens, lol.

(edit, my point has literally just been proved by both AAN and BN, Imfao)

Not that well known, very new user with not a lot of posts, the name isn't all too recognizable or unique enough to remember, either.

I'd say not very well known as they've only begun posting a few days ago but I get the feeling they're a puppet of someone, though I don't know who.

Well known to an extent, they've been an active F7er and have begun dipping their toes into GP, which is certainly a surefire way to become more memorable.

Someone I'd consider an F7 regular, and they've interacted quite frequently with the F7 community outside of the forum context (similarly to how Majestia was a frequent place for F7ers to converse in), 6.9/10 - 7/10.
