This song has much more.....disturbing lyrics then I realized when I talked about actually liking this Nine Inch Nails song while hearing it on the radio.

Edit: Meh, I've heard more disturbing lyrics. I think, after reading some comments, I get the intentions of the lyrics more.

I WANNA FUCK YOU LIKE AN ANIMAL

That's my fav NIN album and probably the only I still really love. Also, I find it an odd coincidence that I'm currently listening to different covers of Hurt right now.

The credits song from Rome: Total War. The only song you write particularly dramatic battles too.

You know when that came out, I remember people telling me that they thought the song was literally expressing the desire to fuck an animal. It's kind of shocking that the song got heavy radioplay at that time, but perhaps it was a lyrical tipping point in popular music.

Two years later "Pepper" was a hit song. As long as the song was about violence, and the chorus was sunny and meaningless, nobody cared at all (unless they heard the band's full name).

I started listening to more Aphex Twin for the past like two days after I heard "Milkman" for the first time. Lovely.

I just heard it on the radio, again, and asked what band it was....again, and felt kinda like listening to it. I don't really know all that much of Nine Inch Nails. I actually, at least originally, didn't like the Nine Inch Nails version of Hurt, and preferred Johnny Cash' cover.
But I haven't heard it in so long I might like it now.
