A fine maybe because even though its funny as hell the government of SN doesn't want people to hop onto this like a trend.

It's questionable why you still use paper letters, and the idiots in the government who did not inspect that bomb threat ought to be fired. Probably given a very big warning, but offered one-time chance of redemption if you help the government solve this problem. Unless you are already have been convicted, then you go to prison.

5 years for animal endangerment, another 10 years for penguins being considered an exotic animal (assuming they are antarctic Emperor penguins, but blue penguins are not legally exotic), 3 years for illegal animal experimentation, and a $50,000 fine for misuse of a testing animal so about 18 years in a federal prison and a $50,000 hole in the wallet.

We don't actually have a lot of suburbs, we're mostly either Urban or Rural. Nonetheless, so long as its an individual enterprise, its expected that anyone buying would be aware of the risks. So unless its Juice That Makes Your Head Explode or unusually toxic or harmful, its perfectly legal.

We have backup replica bodies and their mind data stored in CyberSpace so it would be a quick and easy fix, though probably regardless of whether it was a true accident or negligence, it means time in CyberSpace Time Dilation Prison and possibly simulated death penalty.

EDIT: Ninja'ed twice, tempted to keep my answer anyway.

Both of the above (being in a paramilitary and assassination) carry life sentences with the potential for a whole-life order, or even the death penalty.

Classified as a felony (battery or assault) can earn between 2-5 years in jail time depending on severity and intent. If the vehicles were targeted and/or it results in a death then reclassified as a homicide with a life sentence.

Punishment for tax evasion?

AN: driving a firetruck recklessly results in heavy fines, and where/time of day the firetruck was driving. Can be classified as a misdemeanor or felony with jail time of up to 12 years. License revoked permanently and fired regardless if misdemeanor or felony.

Cars are mostly for government functions and is rarely a thing to the common people so if, for some reason, a plebeian saw a car, it's most likely a Party member is inside. With that, it is certain death sentence by hanging in public. Additionally, before the eventual demise of the accused, they will be subjected to Room 101 for a year or two.

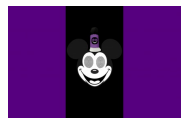

Perpetuating anti-government acts through violent means.

Legal. In fact, it's your sole duty as a Merryman to let the stations and normies know you're out to get them.

How long you spend in a re-education camp depends on how severe the offense was. Technically, wearing anything other than your officially assigned uniform in public can be prosecuted as public indecency, and could be punished with up to 3 months manual labor. Of course, this is not too stringently enforced outside the capital city of Santa Río, because like that's a bit tough to enforce for obvious reasons. Now say you went out in public naked, punishing that is a lot easier to enforce and comes with a much heftier punishment (an upwards of 5 years imprisonment). So yeah, don't be publicly indecent in Cierrida I guess
