Outside of the fact that it'll probably get you shot and killed by the owner of the property in Andronya, it will be treated as a trespassing, and it can have a hefty fine, plus covering all costs for damages to the person or property. If it's an emergency, however, like firefighters trying to access your home during a fire, no crime whatsoever.

Great idea, we should try that sometime! Would make it much easier to break out of or operate out of! We... don't think any of the areas we are operating out of have that specific action criminalized, most likely because we don't think anyone has attempted that before. That said, it would likely result in charges of sedition, impersonating government officials, and various other charges from fraud to embezzlement. In the Holy Empire, that would probably attract inquisitors, to take you away to a black site and torture you to death in secret. In the Cult of War, assuming they cared at all, they'd probably enslave you, and keep you naked inside of a tiny metal cage wallowing in your own feces while they starve you. (Most likely, they'd care if they thought you were using it to "go easy on prisoners".)

Understandably, we would prefer not to get caught.

succeed by hacking into them

Depends on whether the Caliph, the Chief Qadi and the Grand Imam like the corporations or not.

If the Caliph ,or if not both of the other two, don't against the corporations, not a crime.

If it's corporation the Caliph (as well as the Grand Imam and/or Chief Qadi) supports, amputation of a hand.

Val'Grazia doesn't really have schools, as the peasantry are taught by their parents, whilst the merchant and noble classes hire a tutor to teach their kids. Now, if the tutor teaches the kids something the parents don't like, then they just get fired and blacklisted from teaching. However, if the tutor is teaching royalty, then the parents will exile them from the realm.

Same as any other domestic violence case, that being both husband and wife will be told to "sort it out yourselves". However, although this happens primarily on "husband on wife" abuse, wives that are at a desperate enough situation often take advantage of the "Watch thy Neighbour" policy and report their husbands for "subversive actions", which would very likely lead to the husband's execution. Theoretically, an abused husband could also do that to his wife.

They will be treading on very thin ice, because we will have little evidence of actual consent to the assistance of suicid.

If a girl, not a crime as the female driving age is sixteen.
