In the embers of the Citadel's underground bunker, a monitor disconnected from the mainframe continues to play records of Rapture's ill-fated leader. A ghost of the past continuing to haunt the underwater city itself.

"Audio Record No.1"
"Committee, huh? I never liked the idea myself. Avoiding committees like the Fair Employment Practice Committee which seeks to trample upon the individual entrepreneur with their misguided perception of "equality" is precisely why I created Rapture. The committee and mass organization only seeks to drown the individual in one voice. Karakalpak is built different from any nation on Earth with its focus on directorial committee. It has its strength such as being structured like a hydra but any committee is bound to devolve to factionalism and infighting just like the Soviet Presidium. Which is oddly fitting as they were imparted with the knowledge of Lenin. Though the hammer and sickle have since long left Karakalpak, the Soviets certainly altered their national psyche, their lake, and made them averse to American democracy. If nothing else, I commend them for not falling to the temptations of Mohammedan dogma. Which is disappointing because these people deserve much better than this..."

~ Howard Steyn, Mayor of Rapture City and its Grand Visionary

Rapture City

- In the underwater city, two roles have emerged from the City's ongoing civil war: the City Monitors who defend the peace and the Red Caps who fight against unjust systems. The city's infrastructure is crumbling under its own weight and kinship is snuffed by the paranoia of totalitarianism. Yet the people would be in for a surprise as their virtual overlord have died many years ago as the oppression continues under his name...
- Not an 1-1 exact replica of Bioshock lore and Rapture City. Only the city's atmosphere and setting is maintained.

one. It would seem like things are slightly different here, but unfortunately, they fell to the same hubris - by human greed, by unchecked science. It's a shame, because the other Rapture I lived in for a decade (for the fun of it) was such fun back in its heydays. I bet this place was the same too before all of this mess happened. One way or another, you can tell that the Mayor is definitely like a Valentian, in physical and technical form - he uploaded his consciousness, and it would seem that they have not exactly gotten the synthetic body down just yet. So you see, I am here mere minutes before you disconnected and pulled the plug from yourself, effectively a suicide. I understand what you have been trying to do, and it's a shame to see it gone eventually. I would not say you have failed; you have tried, and that was all that matters. You gave a few moments of peace and happiness to people, even if things won't stay that way. [She stretches out her hand, with her left hand pointing to a synthetic body of a shell that she materialized] Now, would you come with me? There is much more to this world. If you want to pull it here and now, I ask that you at least give me a few moments of your life to see the other worlds. I know a nice place...

"Your backstory is a sad one but a happy one as well with you making friends despite being disconnected from your own universe. And there's towards the end of the tale, you unlocking the ability to travel between different realities and even determine one's fate? I'm going to say the last thing is a bit of stretch. No one can control another destiny. That is for the individual and the Gods themselves to be masters and overcomes of, not us, mere mortals, gifted with strange and powerful abilities from our makers. Otherwise, you seem good enough to trust and have a cup of tea with, as you don't appear for the moment. Not to be a threat to my father, family, and countrymen. So my stance is neutral."

"As ill health takes hold of me, I have been less present over these tachyonic channels. However... the reappearance of the Von Rořand family always peaks my interest. Of the frumans I have seen here, they are by far the most... interesting bunch, believing that I'd wish to travel to their planet and tour it. Heh, ahem, in any case, Amfrehřt, as I may call him in my tongue, is an inconsequential ruler. I cannot deny that I admire those with the grit to move through the ranks as I did from a lowly warrant officer in the navy to the leader of the IUR Defense Forces... however... it is of the utmost likelihood that those claims of work are lies. Sure, he may have shown merit, but there is no true way to tell if this merit was acted on directly or if mama and tsatsa pulled strings. Not to mention, I'm unable to find any combat records... which is quite odd for this family. But, I take any records from the primitives with a grain of ftona. Thus, I and the IUR believe that Amfrehřt Von Rořand inconsequential and not a threat to Rtsin or her inhabitants."

From an early age, it seems that Švahnbern here was able to make good use of his abnormally high intelligence...for ends that suited himself anyways. He became a naval captain by removing his enemies, rose to his position by a combination of luck and determination, and then saw it all gone again with his own mistakes. And then for some odd reason he was able to rise back up again? In a world like theirs filled with conflict I hesitate to give my thoughts of 'right' and 'wrong', but his choice to return to leadership seems less of something to applaud and more a demonstration of how power-hungry he is. His ability to climb the social ladder is not something to be admired, but rather to be disgusted by, for he did it for all the wrong reasons."

Councilor Akitamoto Fujio

"Oho, a university application? Hm, I remember applying. But gracious, I hope you're as exceptional a student as you sound! If I had to compete with a whole generation of young Parks, I would have never made it into an American university. But before I inadvertently drone about your academic accomplishments, what of your personality, your human side? Well, you're ambitious; you chose a demanding course schedule. Your character deeply impressed Dr. Steel, and and based on the story about you and the transfer student, I can see why. That—well, that story touches me. I was the foreign student once, after all, when I went to university in America. The friends I made, the students who were patient enough to not dismiss me as either inconvenient or quaint—they were some of the finest people I ever knew. Still are!

"Yet there is something else I notice. It's—well, I should add that I mean no criticism, as whatever can be said of you can be said of myself as well! —but I can't help but think that I see your silver spoon in your transcript. Your school is extremely specialized, in agriculture, economics, and philosophy. In a communalist, agricultural society, those are the subjects of future leaders, aren't they? Managing crop output, balancing the economy, teasing out and justifying society's construction. And it was a school with the best of resources as well. Your instructor held a doctorate, and the school offered classes a student could only dream of taking at my university. And Dr. Steel noted that the transfer was looked down on for seeming 'low class.' Well, where would that happen but in a class where everyone felt high class?

"What am I saying with all this? I... don't know. Perhaps it's just a moment of recognition? I only noticed what I suppose might be the signs of your childhood privilege because I shared them! We do not choose what families we are born into... what we choose is what we do with what we're given. Your forebears thought you were born to lead—or at least, I'm guess that perhaps they did, what with investing education into you—and at least in this glimpse of you I have now, I think they're right. You've given thought to right and wrong—Law and Injustice 1? As I said, students could only dream of Justice Studies at my university!—and you've lived with an eye toward that, as demonstrated by how you treat others and by the compassion Dr. Steel sees in you. Yes, I think you'll be one who uses wisely what you've been given.

"Then again, perhaps I'm tilting at windmills and am seeing myself in you where I am not, haha! After all, what is a silver spoon in my world might not be much to speak of in your future world of Warring States America and somewhat shoestring communalism. So perhaps I am presuming more class than there really is. And I never would have considered taking Anarchist Theory 1. Maybe that speaks to how much more 'bourgeois' I really am in comparison.

"Well, in any case, it was a challenge, but an interesting one, to try to get to know young Miss Park. Wherever she goes for university, I wish her good luck!"

The Statement on Akitamoto

"Lotus conservative party? After reading a bit more about it, that seems a pretty agreeable position to hold, especially with being more similar to the labor - we vary of those "new conservatives", personally. Anyways, Akitamoto certainly seems to be experienced on political spotlights and a veteran when it comes to leading his party, and someone we could trust if we were from the same universe. He might be a tad too idealistic at times, but hey - populism has its public PR benefits. Anyways, let's see more of what he has to offer."

"He is fluent in both Japanese and English - pretty good, considering how difficult Japanese is for some of us. Then again, it is his native tongue most likely, so here's that. His early career is tied to banking and monetary issues, yet it was also a place where he would realize that he could also benefit his community - huh, an interesting turn of events. Considering our experience with banking types and crony capitalism, this is a pleasant surprise. We find it a bit disheartening and funny at the same time that the new conservatives call him "a liberal in disguise" - he holds to public civility, and the "live and let live" approach. If those new conservatives oppose it, doesn't it say something about where their actual values and priorities lie? Sure, we are not the best in personal and political freedoms, but still... Overall, we are neutral to cordial with Akitamoto - his political career and policies are agreeable, but we think that he doesn't exactly share the same sentiment back."

The Statement on Armfeldt

"Well well, isn't it the son of that Grand Emperor Charles von Roland? We still remember that awkward moment when he gave an opinion towards us, and how Ambrosia dissed Charles for his "PTSD". Let's hope that the Ammfeldt is a bit better in that regard."

"Worked as a communications officer, with a "down-to-earth" personality and humbleness? Call us cynics, but we doubt that humbleness a bit. As for the "professional militarism" that made him rise through the ranks, what is the exact meaning of that? Is it because he was a some good military tactician and well-versed in military history, or his militaristic views on the matter? Yes, he observes the battlefield and is said to be knowledgeable in the art of warfare, but how ready would he be against an actual war or a situation when Empire's stability crumbles? The intel in question just sounds so damn boastful, almost as if there are no dark stains of his past mentioned. Hmm."

"The political views... Well, this is pretty sad - yes, you are the man of the people and want to carry out whatever benevolent policies your father implemented, but what other fire is burning inside you? Populism is useful for the masses, sure, but you can't always be benevolent. As for his views towards Abrahamic religions, we guess that it is better than a zealous religious radical, but at the same time it is just so mediocre. Overall, not enough info to evaluate him there."

"As for his hobbies, well - aren't they the ones you would expect from a privileged prince? Military history, art, painting, and other similar hobbies aren't always just a thing for rich people, but he has already got the financial aspects covered with little effort even with the whole attempt to appear humble and "down to earth". A lot of us have to work hard and have less time for such hobbies, Jose. We think that the issue there is the fact that there is so little to praise or condemn, but rather a painful mediocrity."

"Well, then. It has been some time since I have last spoken on this bunch. I have changed quite a bit, and I presume they have as well. Though, to be honest... have they? Is it not the nature of these bodies to stay the same despite the passage of time? To not change, but rather force change to match their own perceptions? That can't be effective. Things change, such is the way of our world. A single trained leader willing to take up with wise counsel would be better than having many in command, I think, and you cut off your own hand by refusing to acknowledge that. For that matter, the lot of you do."

"First lessons are always the hardest, especially embracing the fact that sometimes circumstances force us to accept working with or for people we don't like. I admit, I'm a bit envious of you, having accomplished so much at such a young age: filling your father's boots, getting the elders to take your side, keeping your Father's, erm, family business and dream alive...sacking Khevisarash. I'm rather useless in comparison. Then again, I also wouldn't envy your position too much. Materialistic goods aside, it seems that fighting against the Berghi is only half the battle. You didn't just inherit your father's legacy, you got his enemies from other clans too, without a doubt. The bad thing about big families is that they always have a thing for asking for more, sometimes a lot more than what one can deliver. But hey, you're shrewd enough to be the influential Caller and manage around backdoor politics, I'm sure you can sniff out trouble.

Also...Feeding entrails to dogs? I wish my title were that imposing. I wouldn't have to deal with those paparazzi parasites.

Lt. Evans Lewis, Communications Officer of UNSC Bastion: Oh, thank goodness, another person amidst this void of space! Do you know where we are? Do we have a bearing? Please respond! If you can hear us, please, we are not far in space. Coordinates are: ... Ahh, we are not very sure ourselves. Please, we are in a big ship, you can't miss us.

Colonel Brea Jill Enzensberger, Captain of UNSC Bastion: I am not sure if he is someone that I would consider him to join the crew of me and this ship. Sure, he does show plenty of promise, but the fact that he is cocky and a little self-centered? I am not sure if he is going to be a team player, at that. I will have to make sure that he is more suitable after a more... thorough investigation. Hey, maybe he can even pay us a visit on the ship- though he will have to make damn sure that he doesn't spend more than 16 hours on it if he doesn't want unforeseen consequences. The paparazzi, huh. At least be it the Navy, the Army, or the Royalty, some things never change with people drooling all over for you. Either way, I do get a bit of positive vibes from him, but his attitude is... I will have to check to that.

Cpt. Samantha Li Jing Yi, Technical Officer of UNSC Bastion: At least their first flight was uneventful, for the lack of a better word.

A long-rotting nation of someone you know, just recently revived with a story to boot.

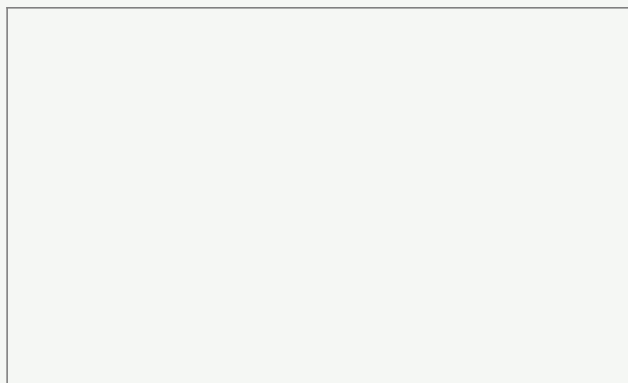

Perhaps experimental, I am still trying my best to write the later sections.

If anything, the bond and level of care for their fellow crewmembers is quite clearly seen throughout the long period of logs dating over 60 years. What's more, I can see the level of trust everyone onboard this...rather fantastic and unthinkable vessel...has towards both one another and their commanding officers. Nothing shakes their faith, which is something I must say is indeed enviable. "There is little to no love in my heart for steppe dwellers. Unwashed, uncouth and particularly aggressive. To think that one's ability in swinging their sword could possibly net them the prize of leadership. It was only 100 years ago when the tribes that once dwelled Nebumet were busy raiding each other's caravans and settlements, stealing grain and murdering each other's children. All to deprive the other of the ability to grow so that one day, such consistent violence would win them the crown jewel known as Nebumet! Goddess above, you're just like the Beravidr.

Perhaps I'm too harsh. After all, my great grandfather was a great warrior. A bulky, swarthy man with the ability to cleave a man in half with his saber! At least, that's what my father and his father before him told me and him respectively. That and your people seem to at least comfort one another among the fireplace. How primitively sweet. You do seem to be the cream of your tribe's crop. Now don't disappoint your father and ruin his progress. Then again, all traits have their place in one's character. Perhaps your apparent celibacy might spark the necessary fire to make your tribe relevant, in the grand scheme of things. Perhaps merit can be the basis of your government!

Perhaps not though, to think your goddess would be comfortable to allow barbarism to continue flourishing for too long a time. Of course, we all start from somewhere but don't you think your goddess would know when to, at the very least, intervene for your tribe's sake and enlighten them with the gift of knowledge? What is she waiting for, if I might ask? Surely, an ignoramus such as I would be completely clueless to the inner machinations of your cult. In the meanwhile, I look to the mother goddess, Thoeris, and seek her guidance. Have you ever thought about going down on your hands and knees, begging your goddess for a way out? Or do you think your tribe will continue riding into the sunset, to the sounds of burning villages and wailing widows? At the very least, the only widows I've created are the wives of those who wanted to turn back the clock on Nebumet's progress. You see, Nebumet is not a state! It is a being, a living breathing cacophony of souls! One needs to organize those souls if one wants to create wonders.

Oh, Nadine wished to inform me that you should not take this to heart and send your horsemen after me, if the stars ever align that we may meet one another somehow. I only seek to impart the wisdom and knowledge bestowed upon me by my life's work and experiences, along with the little crumpets of knowledge that the mother goddess is so generous to offer me."
