Well, to be honest, its like how the US is seen IRL 🤔

Edit: And besides, New Spiedska is in the far future (2148), so most countries in South America are gone

I'd have to assume you took at least some inspiration from Atlantis judging from the fact that Las Palmeras is located on a landmass smack dab in the middle of the North Atlantic. Also, its scenery and architecture has a Mediterranean/North African vibe to it.

Being an atheist in their territory will likely cause folks to respond negatively to you, and might even include some security folks 'visiting' your hotel room.

Be advised, a Godulan would get entirely the wrong idea about that. Something something 'I'll try ANYTHING once!' something...

The Godulans function kind of like a machine (from my perspective at least). Critically unflinching engineers, extremely skilled in robotics and the sciences, and each one of them is made up of five minds working together. A very industrious nation indeed.

It's a fairly prosperous Berber state in North Africa which had successfully repelled both Romans and Arabs.

Spiedska is a (relatively, for the region) small nation in northeastern North America consisting of ten states and one Federal District (We can only guess where that might be). It has been inhabited by Inkleling peoples, who left the sea approximately 9,000 years before present, making theirs among the most ancient and well-established cultures in the area.

The administration division of Dihganistan composes of three oblasts/vilayets: North, Central, and Souther Oblast. They are represented by three Seats or towns: Turania, Isfara, and Qal'a-ye Baland. However, the oblasts exist only in the name of the towns.

Al Gore not only invented the internet but is single-handedly leading the search to destroy the foul beast known only as 'Manbearpig'. He has gotten the approval of one of the singular most powerful nations in the world with a population of around 100 Million (if their leader is in a good mood) to search down the beast and the fact he doesn't have the entire UN on his side is astonishing to me.

On June 18, 2020, after six years of effort by the national space program, Aroni became the first nation to land astronauts on the moon since the United States in 1972. It was reported that, despite the presumable decline of live television due to streaming technology, the Aronian population were huddled around their TV sets just like the Americans a half century before - a fact that

I find so much more adorable and touching after considering the circumstances.

Then, one thousand years ago, that began to change. Human technology began to release ever-increasing amounts of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases into the earth's atmosphere. Within a few hundred years, the Antarctic Peninsula and its surroundings had melted, and the rest of the continent followed suit after a few hundred years more. As the ice drew back, it revealed the face of the Antarctic continent, sculpted by grinding ice over the eons into a singular kind of intricacy and beauty.

The fact that they have a thing with making a nice little flower out of the utter disaster, which I am fine with, of course! 🍀 I mean it positively in the fact that we seem to share the same history, more or less.

The parallels where human disasters have changed the world drastically, but for the better. Except that for Karamiko, I suppose that there weren't billions of deaths involved, thankfully. And yours is much more realistic in the sense that while this is an ideal world to be in, it's a cautionary tale that too much pollution will take a toll on the world and it can go either way! ><

Lovely stuff all around! ^^

Even so, Antarcticans are still biologically affected by the cycle of the sun. They are often much more energetic and emotional in summer, and much calmer and mellower in winter, regardless of the time of day.

This is also a fascinating piece, because I am aware of the body clock for the day, but the body clock for the year is something that I have not seen any other nation do it before!

EDIT: Likewise! Glad to be back after such a hectic schedule! 😊
