the farting part isn't technically a crime, but believing in a god is, so probably 2 years of reeducation.

Serving someone ill-prepared food (both for if it is fatal and non-fatal)

Not really a crime if its a one time thing. If its more than once, fatal, it could be manslaughter/attempted murder depending on the circumstances and if its directed toward the same person and they would get at least 20 years in prison. If it's not fatal and in a restaurant, the business may get their licensing/permits revoked.

Maximum sentence for kidnapping of a minor is 25 years, minimum is 10, so no matter what you'll be in prison for a while.

Driving a tank in public as non-military personnel.

Depends- because in Lakan culture the human body is rarely viewed in a sexual way, in most shires, public exposure in areas where it'd be viewed as normal would not be a crime, however in more westernized and/or "normal" parts of the Empire up to three years in prison.

Not inherently illegal, but very rude. If done to a government official, law enforcement, or military personnel, it could be considered disrespecting of the respected office, and could cause you to face jail time of around 2 years.

Embarrassing a government official on live television?

Depends on how. Most likely, nothing or light punishment such as a small fine.

Not a crime, although it's seen as wasteful - a whale is very valuable for its meat and bones and could feed a lot of people.

NINJA'D.

Stealing the Empress's pet could potentially get you killed, simply because in order to do so you'd have to illegally break into the palace - for which you'd be shot on sight. If you do survive, your hands will be chopped off and you'll face at least 20 years in jail.

Death by hanging in all shires as part of a Royal Decree, at best, a life sentence with no parole in sole Subjects. In some subjects up to 30 years of prison with mandatory corporal punishment (cutting off of one hand because religious stuff)
