I did that when going through long songs. Would put on like a 16 minute song then switch to Minecraft and work on some project until the song was over, then come back here and post a new song. Quite a terribly slow experience on my computer, but whatever, though it appears our internet provider actually upgraded the lines like they said they would so our Internet is like 3X faster then it was just about a week ago.

Right now I'm busy working on RP-related stuff if I'm not posting on here.

You're making me feel like trying Red Dead Redemption... should I fight the urges? Or should I submit and give in to my desires?

And now melodeath to clear my mind from that Igorrish black metal.

What are your opinions on open world games? I think Red Dead Redemption does an amazing job with the atmosphere in the game, and it makes you feel like you stepped into the wild west or something. The story is also great, but I wouldn't call it exactly a cheery story. John Marston (your character) is one of my favorite characters in gaming, along with various other characters in the game.

Got the game from my brother. Best free game ever ☐

Without lots of mods I find open world games to be lacking, but I am tempted to try Red Dead Redemption.

Cheery story aren't entertaining, so not having a cheery story is a plus. ☐

I feel the same way sometimes, but got kinda used to it since my computer is so old that I just had to do without it. I wanted Skyrim on my computer specifically for mods but had to get it for PS3. Oh well.

I usually lose interest too quickly without heavy modding.

Movies have often been ruined for me when the ending is happy. Happy endings have no place, considering how excessively overdone happy endings have always been.

If you like melodeath you should try Be'lakor.

Movies throw out desperate happy endings way too much. Which really doesn't work in gloomy settings. I enjoyed this movie "The Way Back" but the whole ending....in a 2 hour movie, felt rushed, and the happy ending was meh. The rest of the movie was good though but the last 10 minutes just seemed so rushed.

This is why I like Game of Thrones, because I know it is based off a book series that is NOT about happy endings at all, and about being as shitty as possible.

Same deal with me enjoying messed up movies, and gloomy movies.

Melodic death metal.

I think the only death metal I've gotten into so far is Dir en Grey, though Secret Chiefs 3 has 2 death metal songs which is just weird with their music.

Geez, video game soundtracks are insanely large at times. Portal 2 one has 77 songs, and Assassins Creed Revelations is 2 1/2 hours long with 80 something songs. Skyrim is like 3 1/2 hours long. Video games can get away with soundtracks longer then movies easier...

I find it interesting that almost all the names of people who did music for the game have fitting names for the wild west. William Elliot Whitmore, Bill Elm, Woody Jackson, all sound good.

Dir en Grey is not my first thought of death metal. ☐ Obscure is probably considered death metal.

Be'lakor should be the image of melodeath instead of In Flames. In Flames is for weenies.

Considering 90% of my clothes appear to go into the "dark loads", yes, that too

“

Dir en Grey is not my first thought of death metal. Obscure is probably considered death metal.

I know they aren't just death metal but some of their stuff I'm pretty sure fits that well.

Remember Me Soundtrack-Olivier Deriviere-Nilin The Memory Hunter

Interesting composer name.

This soundtrack has an interesting mix from what I heard. Glitchy orchestral music with a Theramin (Instrument I seriously want to own) in it. The orchestral music itself isn't that exciting but the mix makes it cool.
