"There is a certain point in the course of a leader's tenure where you are forced to ask yourself if you are leading well- if your hand is too firm, or too soft, or otherwise not well-adjusted to your people. I am not sure of my answer to that question regarding my own rule, but I can be sure in my answer regarding the Exarch. She rules like she is a god. She has literally molded the society that hosts her to her own will. I do not think it is the role of any leader to do such a thing- they must guide their people, sure, but they are not to extend their will so far that citizens are only allowed to work at tasks they can accomplish alone, so as to prevent the rise of... corporations? I do not know what those are, but certainly they are not so bad as to limit the products to be made by one's own hand? And refusing to accept that anyone besides herself is fit to rule? Though she may say she has no feelings on the religions people follow, it strikes me that in all but name she wants people to worship herself. After all, she tolerates no divergence from her own opinion on civilization under her rule. I think she styles herself a goddess in all but name, and that is a mortal sin. It is a shame that I cannot even dream of besting her with strength of arms."

What happens when you cross anime powers and overpowered leaders with furies, all written by a bored Homestuck fan with too much time? Well, you get Rumei. A multiethnic, FT republic with both might and magic that let it conquer the entire Orion Arm.

Hedonism and qualities that come from hedonism are just not something I appreciate. Especially when one's whole life revolves around it. Luckily, I don't think I ever want to have any relations with this Skyhooked society. I don't find them appealing, and I'm sure they wouldn't find us appealing."

Huh, an immortal lord-protector who is seemingly ageless, a gangster, and someone who is purge happy? I get vibes of a certain Immortal Tsar, except that he was just a face like Father America was, and in fact was completely mortal, rumored to have died in a hunting accident in 80s. Either way, I have a some sort of "enemy's respect" towards Russians.

From one side her managing to defeat Baltic uprisings and Bolshevik movement shows that she has some skills, but from other side I am worried of what kind of madness the ethnic minorities under her rule could experience, as Russians don't have the best record in this case. For this reason, broken up Russia doesn't seem like a bad choice anymore.

As for her politics, her decision to create a bureaucracy is a good one as she understand that it is needed for society to function, and she isn't one of those idiots who yell "drain the swamp!". That said, I was left dumbfounded a bit - if she bonks both the monarchists and republicans in head, then who she is? Some other beliefs might be her government's, not her own, but she still is tied to them. Like usual I can agree with a few of them, yet I am rather cordial with bolshies and slavery myself, so...

And M1911 as the personal sidearm? Well, I see that the Mormon's pistol is still going strong. Gotta be honest, I love that pistol as well.
