"You speak as if everyone cares about the opinions of their lessers. That is not a position that logically applies to everyone. I've met countless in this omniverse, and not a single other who is equal to even one-millionth of me - so why should I care about the feelings of such lower lifeforms? A good leader has no need for useless tact and ass-kissing, their abilities speak for themselves, and for a leader to use such petty diplomacy is a sign of weakness, as it implies they view such other beings as 'equals'.

We may both have rather decorated military careers, but you're nothing more than a petty mercenary. A properly developed military state has no use for mercenaries, as mercenaries are just another form of capitalist parasite draining blood from the lean, well-muscled state, until it is reduced to decrepitude. There is so much more you could be doing, so much more of value, yet you relegate yourself to such loathsome parasitism. Time will tell my opinion, I suppose. You have promise, but currently, as you are, you're a worthless mercenary capitalist scum."

What irks me first and foremost, is your absurd style. With all due respects, I have no right to control what you wear, but let's just say that your suit of armour is both absurd and impractical. Do you not get tired of that? And your title is hardly better. Seriously? 'Supreme Ruler of All Reality'? That's simply comical.

What is worse would be your policies. Government's right to seizure? Seriously? Any self-respecting country would know to respect the territory it captures, taking from it only the bare minimum it needs to continue. Pillaging it would only cause the locals to be angered, and rightfully so, which leads to failure of the operation if they rise up. The Government's right to experimentation is hardly better -- what do you mean when you say consent is 'pesky'? OK, it might as well be, but even an autistic person like myself understands that it is vital.

Wait, I forgot. You probably don't care about your people regardless. As with the Minister of Defence has said a few weeks ago, your willingness to LITERALLY MURDER 90% OF YOUR TROOPS in a battle only proves that you, and likewise your generals, barely give a damn about long term sustainability

"Listen here, larva. Why should I 'respect' lesser beings? Why should I care if they try to rise up? My troops will crush any dissent. They are indoctrinated with utmost loyalty, and have commissars to ensure that loyalty remains, that even as they breathe their last they do so with words of praise to my empire. My goal is to conquer everything that ever was and will be, across every multiverse. So that means taking all of the land, painting all of the maps, planting all of the flags, making sure that nothing that exists remains outside of our empire. This goal takes priority over any pathetic concepts like 'free will' or 'sovereignty' or 'diplomacy' or whatever bullshit excuse you want to come up with for why I shouldn't sterilize your planet with gamma rays and plant a flag in it. And when I say 'consent is pesky' I mean just that. It is so problematic when people don't want to be experimented on. I must not allow such things to get in the way of science. People complain too much when all you want to do is cut them open without anesthesia and see how their fucking organs work. Science is the greater good - their consent ultimately does not matter, so I do away with it.

Murder 90% of my own troops? You misunderstand the context, so let me explain it, you waste of oxygen. Those are merely battle casualties. You obviously don't understand the fucking intricacies of forcing your enemy to engage in total warfare as you intend to make their state no longer exist and quite possibly make their species no longer exist. Maybe if you were on the receiving end of it, you might comprehend? So listen here, you stupid, worthless biomass - they were throwing everything they had at us, down to every WMD in their arsenal. So one unit suffered heavy casualties? That's expected. But the important thing is that they suffered those casualties without breaking morale or rout, and they suffered those casualties while inflicting 100% casualties to the enemy. That, and ultimately... this is fucking sustainable. For every casualty suffered, I'll have countless troops ready to take their place. I don't think you quite understand the scale we're working with here. Even losing a whole galaxy is an acceptable, and very minor loss in the long run, when we have whole multiverses of people. I could match your army ten billion to one and still have inconceivable numbers in reserve; I won't because I have front lines damn near everywhere, so I happen to need inconceivable numbers everywhere.

Someone who's never dealt with casualties in the quintillions has clearly never fucking tried accomplishing anything on even the diminutive galactic scale."

Indeed, he committed these sins against freedom in the name of prosperity. I like the fact, that he brought the prosperity to his people, but were all these killings and blood necessary? There are more subtle and humane means to handle the opposition. Interesting enough, is that for some reason, despite the fact, that we are free-market and pro-freedom society, Pan-Asiatic States have assisted us in a defense against crusaders, hell, I have fought there myself, before I became the Overboss. I was bashin' those knights left and right with my warclub, my warband fought beside me with a fury of our ancestors, who fought theocratic junta oppressors during the revolution. In this battle, disciplined Pan Asian Soldiers, who came to our aid and our fierce warriors fought together, sealing the friendship with enemy blood! As a warrior, I think rather highly of them. Now, there is a monument in the Azure Beaches Five Stars Resort, where Pan Asian soldier stands back to back with our warrior. Ataman Stepanov's thoughts on Guard-Commander Ilu

Personality-wise, Ilu has got some pragmatism and willingness to use less moral methods and not caring much about moral codes as contrasted to Hyrule's Princess. However, there is always someone more cynical and less moral than Ilu, and blackmail is still a great way to get what you want. In terms of physical character, Ilu is fairly strong, albeit not a muscle mountain - still would be dangerous for most of enemy soldiers to engage in fight regardless. His lack of grasp on magic wouldn't be an issue at all in Russian Free Territory, as such thing as "magic" doesn't exist there at all, and his physical strength alone would make him quite respected; still, he would also need to train with anarchist firearms first, before enlisting. Ilu also seems like a classical introvert - opening up and being very talkative to those few he has deeply close ties, while being more closed with the rest, preferring solitude to extroversion. Stepanov also has a similar altitude, with the head described as "a fortress of ideas". With Ilu's personal traits profiled, it is time for the biography.

Even if Ilu did come from a wealthy family, it seems that he has always been an action person, and wouldn't like sitting idle with all of that wealth. Ilu also fought bravely against coup orchestrators and didn't gave up even when it seemed that hope was lost and the mortal forms were gone. Free Territory's and Hyrule's situations are different - in the second, coup was launched by various beasts and a king corrupted by some form of dark magic, which all mortals had the duty to resist, while in Free Territory the power was seized from the hands of pacifist anarchists, which would have been incompetent at the upcoming Second West Russian War. Stepanov generally doesn't like royals that much, but he would definitely support Ilu and Zelda against the Twilight King if he was there. In the aftermath of Twilight period, Ilu seems to have gained some popularity within the people, which he used well to his own advantage by pushing Hyrule to become a reformed, stronger realm. In this period of uncertainty and clash of generations, Ilu's powers and influence have become on par with that of the Princess; she should better hope that Ilu is fairly loyal, because otherwise there could be a second coup in the making, but this time - with Ilu and patriots of Hyrule against the fossils of Old Guard. Overall, Stepanov finds Ilu fairly likeable.

"I find it non-beneficial for Valentina to be known amongst the populace without it surely compromising her position during her operations to serve in the State's clean-up projects. But once recalling my "father" talking about our allies, the Britannians. He believes despite what we would find to be counterproductive that their methods are productive and have both, directly and indirectly, enriched the Empire in one way or another. Even though Alkdor hasn't conducted any joint operations with them in recent time. Nevertheless, Valentina overall is a capable fighter but there is much left to be desired... "

"Oh good lord of a Pope. Yknow? For this one I'm probably gonna throw out all pretenses of cordiality and being prime and proper for once - I'm already at my house anyway. I mean this lad's a person? Or a bloody puppet? Because the whole genetically engineered to be a slave shtick seems awfully familiar. It actually reminds me of some stuff I've heard about Shinodas once upon a time - total horseshit as it turned out but whatever - and the rest of the story just... Bores me. Not a spark of rebellion, no spirit to - I dunno be his own person? - Sure he'll do him but I'm sure as hell not reading this paper again. Reads like one of the older fics I wrote"

"Damn... parents forcing child to change gender... this is just plain wrong! I am glad, Suzuki managed to keep his... I mean, her sanity and ability to think clearly. Not only that, but also study the art of stewardship, which requires strong will in many cases. From resisting boredom, to putting emotions under control and thinking purely pragmatically. Not that I agree with her views all the time, she is too pragmatic if ya' ask me... It's rather hard to please all political groups, and it's unnecessary too... better focus on groups, which align well with one's own political views and apply Pareto principle and also focus on groups, who yield most useful thingies, such as political capital and votes. The opposing ones are too hard to please... gotta just either keep them not-so-hostile... or if they turn to be assholes, subtly deal with them. Social engineering, distraction, divide et impera... the ways, which don't violate human rights and freedom. And yes, I also strongly believe in my ideology, it helps me to be more decisive and energetic and gives me strength. As for conservatives... I think, she should relax and stop caring that much. I can teach her a lil' bit about that, since I learned to stop caring too much about negative comments of conservatives, who don't like my bisexuality and lifestyle. As a summary - I may not agree with her on everything, but I respect her and her mental strength and resolve."-Overboss Shawn Bjornson

"You... You support exactly the same ideas I oppose! It actually fascinates me, how comically oppose to each other we are! You are the epitome, the very living and breathing example of all the things that I hate! Now, I could go on a long and full of gibberish monologue explaining in great detail why and for what I hate you, but would this change anything? Instead, let's settle this matter like a true nobleman and... A raider would- In a fight! After this words, Lavinia drops her winter coat and draws her epee, - Defend yourself, Sir Bjornson!
