somehow is socialist but claims to tout civil liberty. those things are directly opposed in the sense that socialism's goal requires some level of repeal of civil liberty, I would like to learn more about their system as they are probably not actually socialist but simply call themselves as such.

We have a national quote saying the opposite actually, but in the factbook it is clearly stated that we are a liberal social democracy. We have strong public services with a UBI and a mixed economy with several state enterprises and cooperatives. Nevertheless, we have a lot of private industry and operate a policy of free trade (Basically the Nordic Model+)

I've learned that Conscription lasts 7 years. That's a bit... outrageous. I would think 2-4 years is enough. But oh well, you do you.

It is unclear where the original men fighting under Calradios' banner were exiled from, but what is known is that they named their new land after their leader upon its conquest.

They employ workplace democracy as an element of their public decision making. Also, two-thirds of their entire population lives in their capital (50k to 75k), this low population explains how they are able to maintain direct democracy ig.

NewMakasta is a "free market Communist paradise" (sic) which was founded by Germanic people¹ in search of a new homeland, driven from their old home by a lack of resources.

Their land was originally settled by Germanic peoples and "Southern Dragons of Power" and their name either means "Farmland" or "Life". Also I'm not sure if the Southern Dragons of Power are literal dragons or if they just call themselves that, I really hope it's the former.

AN: They're a widely unrecognized breakaway state created when the Soviets forced a diverse cadre of non-Tajiks to adopt an Tajik ethnic identity and then sent them to Europe as an experiment.
Yeah that's actually really unique.
