"Ah, finally, here is someone filled with the fire of revolution, someone who doesn't get dizzy from the spectacle and showmanship of royalty! I wish I could reach across the seas of water and time to, to—I don't know, to celebrate with you, or mourn with you, or embrace you! Ugh, we're both surrounded by supposed progressives who get starry-eyed around monarchs, whether it's your neighboring Californian Empress or my homegrown Baizouan-yet-technically-Anglican-empowered sovereign. Do you know what I mean? It's all egalitarian democracy out of one side of their mouth, and then as soon as they see a crown or tiara their brain switches off, and suddenly this is just how things are, this is just our culture, but the monarch is such a good person. Blegh. The point isn't whether or not I want to have tea with them. The point is, why are we saying this person deserves fancy dresses, a better house, a tax-paid stipend, all just because he came out of one womb and not another?

"...Haha, sorry, maybe I'm talking more about me than about you. Unfortunately, higher ups have told me that reading your more detailed factbook is classified for now", but from what I've seen of you in this international forum, I already like you. Hey, I'm not usually one to do this, but what say we set the economics aside for just a second—I know, I know! I can hardly believe myself!—and talk about our modern day Jacobins and Thermidors?"

That being all the Ayarian rebels that should be punished accordingly for attacking your men in a gruesome manner. Otherwise, I hope you realize that wanton violence against the citizen populace will only hurt your chances of victory and will only hinder the chances for victory when you make martyrs that lead to creating new insurgent movements. "The first aspect of honor of any warrior is martial prowess. You, if I may counsel one so far removed from my own day and doctrine, possess this, though I believe it has been conflated somewhat with brutality. The two may be conflated though indeed; I have met many a good soldier that takes an excess of delight in the art of killing.

"That being said, I have never met a great one who does so. The second aspect of the warrior's honor, the more practiced and finessed aspect, the difference between the warrior and the warrior-exemplar, is the ability to temper one's fury into something more... productive. A people seized by rage might... might approve of a killer at their head, of a wild bloody dog leading them to war, but... but that warrior would never be a great one. Tell me, soldier, does the hand that guides the blade kill better when it does so calmly, or when it is driven on by rage? It is the former- a wild soldier is unbalanced, unable to truly excel. Your lord is right not to trust you- you are not tempered like the steel that covers your breast is. But I feel you can be. Brilliant minds may still reach great heights despite their flaws. You may yet be a martial-exemplar, Metzgersdorff, and your people may yet sing songs of you after your death. You have not yet reached that high place, but you can.

enemies crash again each other in a melee of shadows and machinations. QUOTE What is there to be said of such a man, that speaks not for itself, or through his mouth? And so I shall give voice to that which he opposes, for while he embraces many admirable views, he does so because they are his own- and I doubt he sees any other as worthy of even ruminating upon.

Listen, and question. You sit upon a throne of knives waiting for their chance to stab you in the back. You have cast them into a flurry against each other, but the moment will come when those blades unite against you, and when that moment comes, your fall will have arrived. And as you are thrown to the ground and your bones are broken and your flesh scarred and shattered, and all the world grows dark, what will you remember of your reign? How deep your machinations ran? How cunning eclipsed raw strength? How you held a legacy together through force of will? But what have you achieved, that is not for yourself? You claim to be a teacher, so tell me now, how many of the wrong lessons have you passed on? How many wrong answers have you given, set by your example as much as your teachings themselves? Your tribe is strong, and you are carried on its back, yet hide amidst the shadows of the greater ascendants to avoid any challenge of strength. There is caution and then there is weakness. Which do you embody? How many deals have you made that you will regret upon your deathbed? Speak as well as you may. A silver tongue cannot best the iron fist in a fight, and though you may delegate many of your whims to those ordained to carry them out, remember that you will see nothing of the truth if you depend solely upon others to do your work on your behalf.

But perhaps you care nothing for the truth, or the mutterings of an old and weary woman. Perhaps you think nothing of me, and in me see only a nebulous shadow, one who opposes your will yet has nothing to call her own save the respect of an insignificant cult and a knowledge of an invisible and abstract truth left undefined and unexplained. If you see nothing in my but an insignificant enemy to be forgotten and ignored, that is when I will offer you my pity. Not for your failure as a man, or as a warrior, or a speaker, or a leader, but for your failure as a teacher."

"Oh hello there! Faceless man named, Aelin Skyborn. Real interesting backstory you got there. A diplomat quite the position there to ensure that relations go over smoothly with other countries so you don't have to waste manpower on meaningless conflicts that will cost you more than what you actually gained. Also I find that your marriage with another guy was somehow controversial? Very weird as it's thought of as nothing really, just Alkdorians looking for soulmates, not that very special at all. so why the fuss really? There are far more important matters to look at, like.....Well! I'm drawing a blank here so....I'm going to say rooting out crime and the elements that cause the average joe to become a practice dummy for Law enforcement. Overall, you strike me as alright. It would be nice to see to at least see what you like though."

--His Royal Highness, Ellis Mercer, Prince of the Alkdorian Empire

"A Time Lord, eh? How interesting. Probably won't bother to look over your whole life in one go. I'll go step by step, and that being I find your idea of individually helping others to be completely stupid. Sure, it's great occasionally. However, your an Emperor, and you have that authority to aid millions in one go with a single command by your hand. You will bear more fruits from this, and increase your follower base tenfold, and strengthen the morale of your Empire with an Active Emperor that doesn't go LARP as a superhero but acts as one in true authority and power. Your nation is full of matters that you must attend to, and not have it be trusted with lower bureaucrats that will most likely screw it up and perhaps have already. Put down the cape and get to that office throne, Pheonix. Play time's over. Get to work."

BN, if you don't see the Emperor in this post. That means you don't do him, duh.

Word from the bird is that Ferrios cat is a real cranked cat in his gig, or so I've heard around these parts. Your father, I mean, you've got really different viewpoints from them, surprisingly.

You've achieved a lot in life, I have to admit. I wouldn't expect that from somebody who wears unfinished clothing. You must be quite powerful to defeat the angels...wait...it seems as if the helpers of that Levantine deity that the Americans are always talking about do exist in your world, and not in the good way. Ain't that a bite, but at least it must be neat to be bestowed with powers that defy this universe's laws of physics. Properly guiding that phenomenal capacity is another thing altogether though.

I can't comment well-enough on your other activities. Fighting suffering for the downtrodden and needy are commendable....but my role is to observe and not allowing unwitting bystanders to develop on their own would be a breach of privacy, so to say, under most circumstances. I dig that the skies are a lot more crowded in your dimension than in the one I call home, but I guess that things are so lonely here that we don't mind not cleaning things up as trainwrecks are a show too. That and some people may not like being saved. My two cents. 'Till later, Mercer, good luck.

Remember that flying saucer with strange lights you saw hovering over the sky? Of course you don't. That never happened. And if it did, it was Venus.

"How many more hot-headed militarists are there in this world? First the barbarian, and now you; is there no end to stupidity and warmongering? I imagine you, that idiot, and butcher Klyton¹ would get along quite well indeed; although I might say you seem wiser. At least your violence seems to have a goal, even if it remains as senseless as all the other acts that bring about death and suffering. One day, your string of victories will end with a defeat greater than that you suffered from Chrysaetos, and then all the machinations you have planned will turn against you."

"Greetings Ma'am. Ye seem like a pretty normal lass. In this den of fanatical warlords, god kings, alien overlords, eldritch monstrosities, and survivors of massive apocalyptic wars, it is pretty abnormal to be normal ain't it?

Ha. It be a pleasure meeting ya if yer ever in the need of spare muscle or wanna find out what it feels like to have superpowers gimme a call yes? Ye seem like the kind of folk who would probably denounce my ilk and I won't hold it against ya! but it's always good to have options ye? Yer young for someone in such a large position of power, and that's unique in an era stymied by conservative politics.

It never hurts to think of all possibilities ain't it?"
