"Doesn't matter, yeah... Even that clever bastardo Machiavelli stated in his The Prince, that the best stronghold is not being hated by the people, for if they hate ya', hostile powers may use that for a coup or aid in war or occupation. Always better to have people on your side, even if ya' have a robot army, trust me! I also read about his treatment of White Gloves, and I was pleased. Cannibals bastards, who kidnap random people... they would have been executed in our country too. But if ya' ask me, I'd rather hire human employees for casino, rather than use securitron robots. A battle robot with monotonious and mechanical-ish voice is... in the uncanny valley. Unsettling. Perhaps he should use hologramms from Sierra Madre or Big Mountain? I know, that he has access to this tech, for otherwise, he wouldn't have been able to fly to Mars and build a colony there.

Mu opinion? Well, he is a businessman and a CEO of a rather rich power. If he is able to get to us, then we can offer him a variety of our goods. How about plasma weapons? Or perhaps energy katanas? Or maybe our booze and weed? We can offer him a discount."-Shawn Bjornson

"Changing the name of your nation won't stop the Octavian army Shawn and neither will it stop the inevitable destruction of your pitiful resistance. Our opinion on your leadership and the nation that you rule over has not changed from the day that we first came into contact with it and that opinion is solidly negative. When we finally take Earth the hedonism and lawlessness that has ruled the Sky Reavers will be smashed into the dirt and scattered into the wind and we will replace it with the order and purpose that the Imperium gives to all. We do hope you enjoy your last days of drinking and weapons dealing, Shawn for the end of your pointless life is coming to an end."

"This abomination, such that she is, can only be viewed as some sort of a weakly overly-enthusiastic excuse for femininity at its very worse- that is, she is completely directionless... without guidance from a man, she would be doomed to some cursed existence, wandering the world with no true purpose- the fact that even that sad excuse they call a general is enough to tame her should speak volumes more than I could ever hope. Indeed, while I probably could expound on my opinion in a continuous loop of truth and fair-judgements, I am far too busy doing nothing to do so... ah, but I think the little demoness probably has some poorly formed malediction of an opinion to offer you in the meantime."

-Trokondas, Lord of Isauria & King of the Romans, shockingly not a fan of someone like Tracer...

"Wha?- Ah- Fa... Right. Uhm, Fath- er, His Highness has asked me to tell you what I think of you... I... well, that is... I don't... I'm sorry, I don't know exactly what I'm trying to say... but, I think you seem like someone who would treat one such as myself... maybe, kindly. And while I most certainly mean no offence by it- I think I would- I know I would... I hope I would... enjoy your company. Creatures such as we, after all, are unworthy of others, and however good and Christly you might be, I believe you might suffer as I do."

"Lord Trokondas is an important part of our detour from the global lens to the local. While I give you every urge to avoid the trap of 'great man history,' with the Kingdom of Isauria, it is difficult to deny Trokondas's prominence. He is, of course, as you've already seen in the reader, the kingdom's founder, its first and final king. And in the public perception of Trokondas's medieval world, Isauria and her ruler were inseparable: in the eyes of writers, his kingdom was defined by him, Fisher King-like. At its height, Isauria's prosperity was described in terms of Trokondas's success and confidence. At its lows, Isauria's fall was described in terms of Trokondas's madness and age.

"He himself is an enigmatic figure. A highly superstitious Christian king—going to show that the line between faith and magic was very thin, if extant at all, in those days—who in his own writings and statements aggrandized himself, gloried in violence, and demeaned his family. He is easy to condemn, and some do. Other writers take him more ambivalently and wonder if he is perhaps a victim of his circumstances, a successful leader of a minority people who was doomed and driven to madness by geography and political superpowers outside his control. His historiographic ambivalence may well suit him, for he himself is a bit of an enigma, founding an Anatolian revival state all the way in 1239. If there is one thing historians can agree on about Trokondas—and there are other things, fear not; I only say that for emphasis—but if there is one thing, it is that he defies expectations and categorization."

"i cant say that this one has a lot to go by when it comes to her views and ideologies aside from going by what party that she is a part of, but even then it is limited at best, so i will try to say what i can. Mizushima appears to be completely sound when it comes to her life. she studied religion and museums in her past, only for the sudden integration into politics which probably threw all that aside, but the knowledge is still there at least. I am curious as to how much of an issue it became when she transitioned. i have heard a lot about some religions outright shunning those who are interested in same-sex relationships or outright gender-transitions. I would consider Mizushima one of the lucky ones, as it seems to not be as bad as the stories i have heard of others even executed for such. thankfully this extreme has not occurred. like everyone else, i am interested to know more about her environmental views which seems to not be covered, so i cannot really give her a clearer opinion. the same can go with her overall views and policies, those are also lacking. until i see more of this, i cannot give a better opinion. until then, i remain neutral with Mizushima"

can come to the dictator part, which, I don't recall ever taking Platinia by force and putting myself into office. i simply offered my people a place to stay and the freedom to elect their own officials to rule. i only ever step in if they are threatening the natural life that which i had worked hard to preserve and protect. In the end, i fail to understand your logic and reason behind wanting my arrest if i ever came to visit. Needless to say, you will need not worry of me unless you cast the first stone. but until then, do not expect to be welcomed until you have made a formal apology. My opinion is negative."

"From what I know from this document, the Exarch seems to be a □. For that, I give my respects as one of their kind in the soul. She also seems to be experienced in the Art of War, another commendable achievement. However, I fear that the Exarch has lost her claws, preferring to place importance on matters such as the trees and rivers rather than waging war. Of course, this could be due to the fact that she is the God of her land, and perhaps such duties are necessary for a God to administer their domain. However, there is one aspect of her that I thoroughly disapprove of. She seems to be in the belief that peace would be beneficial for her state. She also places emphasis on the stability of her realm. This, of course, runs contrary to the way that was paved by □□ such as Odin and the teachings of sages long past. Nothing lasts forever, even a state lead by a □□. To seek stability before the spirit of conflict is only to stall the inevitable. Nevertheless if she is to hold such ideals, I am confident that unlike others who aspire for peace, □□ Sera would be willing to spill blood for them. Overall, I am neutral about □□ Sera, although I hope to be on the battlefield

meet her
one day."

Constantine Sein Lin Zaw Naing](#): The change of nations and the name has been noted with by the Valentians. Ahh, good ol' folks that we know and love! I wonder why they have a change, but that is not something that we judge too much on, or even a little. It's just our curious nature that made us ask as to why. Anyway, about Mr. Shawn here. I quite like the man, of course! He's been a friend through and through since Day 1, and there is not even a shadow of a doubt that we have regarding each other. Kind of a shame that he dislikes paperwork, because Jamie definitely does! I think you can ask her with some of it regarding the less classified and secretive matters, haha! I hope to see you again very soon, hmhm! Oh yeah, Sky Reavers, and Skyhooked. I think Sky is a word for them like how "Valkyrie" and "Valentine" are to us. We all have a single running word, if you look at the nations.

With this, the Herrkaiser thinks recruitment of Shawn may not be in order...

Good old skeptical... cynical... and distrusting High Inspector is just sitting there, reading his papers and signing ones that required to be signed. He needs to work harder if he wants to consolidate his power and micromanage every aspect of the government. The recent meeting with the Kramashka Council reveals to him that this system just puts a dent in his power and authority under the guise of 'preventing abuse of power'. The man beneath the mask is far from being consumed by the role he plays... and this is not safe in the Council's opinion. His personality is leaking -- this is against the protocol.

"Not many people make even the slightest of remark that Valentijn Valentina here has gone through much effort not only to save his her world and also rebuilt it alongside his her extraordinary friends, something that sounds like it comes from morning cartoon shows or optimistic science fiction. I am not rejecting the Valentian philosophy outright here, they are capable people... who are just a little different."

"Happiness is subjective, temporary and fragile, and that is why it is so valuable. To be able to filled your heart with happiness, joy, and satisfaction makes you a man woman of great spiritual wealth. It pays off more than material wealth, more than ideologies and rhetorics. It is a fulfillment and a destination. I do hope... very much... that Miss Valentina here can secure it for her people now and forever, or else her people will fall into the same cycle that created them. If there is a rise, there will be a fall."

"In a city of immortals, what does it mean to live? What does time mean to them? What is their end goal? Is it the status quo? Will the Valentians come to answer why they would still want to exist?"

Chairperson of the Kramashka Council, Overseer of the Public Order and the Cult of Black Providence

AN: "Well, now... who is this... broken doll of a person? She seems like an enigmatic one, as well as her entire organization. Of course, being the mask that I wear, I do not oppose the secrecy. But then again, there is little that I can comment on this little wounded green-haired cat here... apart from my curiosity concerning the supposed crime she committed, which must have been particularly severe if it sent her straight to becoming a piece of a military experiment."

"There goes... that sounds like... fun?"
