Frisia is a kind of elective monarchy. The king must be confirmed by the Frisian rulers, therefore, any ruler in Frisia could theoretically be elected. This doesn't seem to work effectively because the kingdom is de-facto ruled by a hereditary monarch almost always "elected" from the line of Eberulf I. Probably influenced by the fact that his line is descended from the Patron Saint and founder of the country.

Out of Aulola's five largest cities (by population), four reside on the island of Maranga with populations in the millions. On the other hand, the island of Ahroku is dominant when it comes to the population of metropolitan areas with three out of the five largest being on the island.

It's a shit hole, brought on by the economic downturn of the US, nuclear accidents, climate change, and general scarcity of supplies.

Also theirs a nuclear wasteland in upper Maine, which i can not for the life of me figure out the cause, the nearest nuclear plant is 100 miles away in OTL, and i don't think it's reasonable for one to have been built their in the 20 years between then and now

And I'm curious about the name as IRL Bethesda doesn't seem to be apart of the nation, but it may share the same origin, the pool of Bethesda in Jerusalem given the "Neo-puritanical" state of the nation and the sort of parallels with the healing of the paralyzed man, that's a bit of stretch to me, but *shrugs*

And as a final side note the map of your territory is fucking gorgeous.

Though the number and yield of their nuclear weapons is limited by international treaties, the setting that Aroni is located within nonetheless seems to have no sense whatsoever of limitations when it comes to Chemical weapons...if their declared tonnage of nerve agents is anything to go by.

Tohorin is a nation in what was the southwestern United States and northeastern Mexico. Sun Worship seems to be a common motif and their Imperial Family claims descent from a Sun Goddess. Their ancient myths are centered around a "Garden of Edo" where "arrogant giants" lived. The Old World was destroyed with "fire arrows". Overall it's clear that these myths are Tohorin's interpretations of what obviously a nuclear war in the distant past.

Despite their origins as a Crusader State, the Kingdom of the Levant is actually pretty multicultural and tolerant. Many ethnic groups have social mobility. Uniquely, gender equality is also greater in the kingdom than in surrounding regions.

That as a nation that needs to defend itself from invasion, its got 45% of the population to be trained fighters, either as armed Pilgrims or non-noble Crusaders (who were not so lucky as to get ennobled and landed). As for the preparedness of these numbers, that's kinda debatable really. But who cares if you have human waves.
