monkey 6876 was on his way home from work when he passed by the movie theater. he saw that the bee movie was playing, so decided to stop and get a ticket. he grabbed some popcorn, and pop. on his way to the booth he ate a piece of popcorn and began to choke. the last thing he ever saw was the beginning script of the bee movie, a movie about bees taking a stand on humans honey consumption, featuring Jerry Seinfeld

After years of injustice, mockery and just general being trod on, Monkey 6873 finally trained in the arts of combat and confronted his boss in a duel. Unfortunately, the boss is a black belt in all known martial arts and 6873 perished in the battle.

Monkey 6872 was the boss, and was gravely injured during his battle with 6873. While he was the clear victor, it seemed that his underling could get the last laugh. The boss staggered slowly away from the scene, leaving a trail of blood. The further from the duel site he got, the more fatigued he became, his steps growing heavier and breathing growing harder. He collapsed alone in a desolate field, dehydrated, tired, and alone. He felt his eyes grow heavy. "Perhaps I could just go to sleep..." He thought. "I guess this is fate. I can no longer move. My vision is cloudy. I suppose I could've been lighter on 6873. I was only trying to protect him, so that he wouldn't end up like me. Living only to fight. I remember when he was young. So pure. I was foolish for thinking I could keep him for myself. Look where my selfishness brought us." Tears were streaming down his face. "I guess I can apologize in hell..." He faded, ready to atone for a lifetime of sins. Then, he heard a voice. "Father," It said. "I'm sorry. I never wanted this. You never wanted this. My story is over, father. But you still have so much more" "6-6873!" He cried, jostled from his rest. "Why? Why are you here to torment me! Just let me pass!" "No, father. Get up. You must keep living. Live...for...me..." A new fire burned within 6872. He was going to live, no, thrive! He could still redeem himself! He lifted himself from the ground. To his surprise, a search party stood over him. He had been saved. He returned home to his wife, who he had left years before. He told her the truth. He didn't expect her to forgive him, and she didn't. But it was closure, and that was enough for him. He left, to seek out a new life, and crossed that street a new man. At least, he would've if he wasn't hit by a crashing blimp and killed instantly.

Monkey 6868 knew his time was coming. All of the monkeys before him had died of random deaths, some horrific, some reality breaking ones, some even made no sense. He looked around his home and said goodbye to his child, Monkey 6867. He knew that his son would die too, like him, but he didn't know when. He had told his child that he could be anything in life, for it would not last long, and he must cherish every moment of it. He explained that he would be dying soon, he didn't know what would kill himself or his child when his child becomes the age of his father. He tells him to continue the monkey bloodline and for each of the monkeys after him to know of their fate, just like his father before him had. After he told his child everything they would need, he stepped outside of his home for the last time and watched the sun set one last time. He heard a faint 'sss' noise and knew his death was arriving. He walked towards the sunset slowly as the 'sss' noise grew closer and closer until BOOM. Monkey 6867 heard the explosion and went outside. He knew it was done. He knew that he must move on and live a life like his father. Monkey 6867 walked back inside his home, and prepared for the life ahead of him.
