That's not absurd, that's Scorched Earth. Not the game, the movie, or the other game; I mean the military strategy.

Yeah, sure, Scorched Earth strategy is not absurd, plenty of armies used it throughout history e.g. the Red Army (because I know more about wars in the twentieth century) during Operation Barbarossa; destroy supplies being left behind instead of letting them fall to the Nazis. What is absurd is taking everyone down with them in a nuclear holocaust.

A better example of absurd vehicle/doctrinal cliché would be the 2000s/early-2010s superdread fad, where everyone's naval doctrine revolved around 1000 meter+ hyperbattleships with ridiculous calibre main gun batteries.

No man it's all about getting clout on a nation RP forum when if a four letter alliance decided to fight me I could retcon my lore to have 4 million men in my military and 5 of each Ace Combat superweapon and there's nothing they can do about it as I one line about Stonehenge blasting their planes out of the sky and a Scinfaxi class submarine raining molten metal over their ground troops.

I think my nation has sort of the antithesis of this sort of doctrine, we've got plenty of plans for getting our shit kicked in in a military conflict, but we don't have any well-developed plans that involve actually losing, outside of a Dead Hand system to automate nuclear strikes should we go down first. It's part of why my country never invested heavily into persistent nerve agents like VX for area denial purposes, preferring G-series agents that dissipate relatively rapidly.

The thing with "absurd" military tech/doctrine/whatever is that it's usually pretty obvious even to laymen like myself why an idea is absurd, and why it shouldn't be used or adhered to. What's odd is how little that seems to dissuade people from militarywank.

Hey! I can't help it! Not when I have a voice in my head that reminds me put on anything Jeff Lynne has written...

But yeah, that tends to happen a lot. Sometimes when people discover something they find mind-blowing, they just wanna share it with as many people as they can and get their opinions on it... No, I'm not salty that someone rated that "Sunshine of Your Smile" remix with simply a number, not at all...

But with music? The case is exactly the same. Much like you, I also have a more varied taste in music, but I just feel like the world needs to rediscover Jeff Lynne, give him some more recognition than just for Mr. Blue Sky. And the rest of the ELO catalogue? What of it amirite?

Now that I'm almost done with the "Down The Lane and Far Away" Sampler, up next is "Armchair Theatre" 🤔

Tell me every little thing! That makes you happy!

A certain four letter alliance is seeming to have difficulty separating OOC and IC to the point that their petty internet drama is becoming a cliché. And honestly, whatever internet beef they're having sounds pretty problematic for NS on the whole since there's accusations of attempting to hack other user's accounts.
