SCP stuff is really overrated these days...

SCPs are boring these days, every SCP now is just an thinly-veiled power fantasy, none of the new ones are even remotely scary. OC SCPs are even worse, they're extremely cringe.

Creating a legitimately decent OC SCP is fucking hard. One of my characters, at first, started as a blatant copy of some SCP, albeit I realized that it wouldn't make an iota of sense, so I did a soft retcon of him. Getting said character to be a quality character is extremely difficult, especially when you're just barely starting.

I would argue it ultimately depends on the intentions of the writer, how they construct said character, how well-written they are(also stemming from the user's writing ability), and a shitload of on-demand retcon pills. If all else fails, retcon 'em.

Had a Not-SCP organisation as an antagonist in my early lore, but later scrapped that part since I didn't like it and got it confirmed in another thread that it wasn't really good for the lore. Although I think I will reuse the name and keep it as an antagonist, but give it a different role.

I can second how hard it is to create a SCP, or even work in the universe. Tried that once, got overwhelmed immediately by the sheer amount of shit that people have created- and the fact that I realized what I like about the foundation isn't the SCPs themselves but the people. People are hard.

Fair enough of a point. I've attempted to look for SCPs to give some form of inspiration, but it's pretty difficult for me.

I wouldn't want to imagine Wormfodder having a SCP-clone org. That is just blasphemy of the highest degree. I mean, I could see some SCP-esque org in your lore, but I really can't.

Oh, another NS cliché, copying some entity from fiction and either barely changing it or changing it so much it's unrecognizable

I am actually guilty of this cliché with some old and current puppets of mine.

Can confirm, that's a cliché. Though I think those modifications to make it your own come with time and effort... mostly time though.

Well, I am glad I removed that particular version of Avianus from my lore. Writing OOC lore really doesn't work with the Worms. Current writing perspectives will be "Author who knows what happens, but doesn't really think that information to be worthwhile telling" and "Author who would think that this information is worth telling, but can't comprehend what actually is going on"

Modifications are fine, no matter what the entity is (country, character, tech, setting, etc) but if you're gonna take from fiction it should at least be somewhat original and somewhat recognizable to fans. Like, not 1-to-1 copying say the Galactic Empire but also not changing it so much it doesn't feel like the Empire anymore.

Take 5 shots every time someone says "this hellsite" / "NS has been a mistake". Drink entire bottle if it has been mentioned twice in one page.

It's understandable and a respectable opinion that some of you don't like this place, I ain't going to change minds. But come on - I've seen it several pages ago. Several times.

Edit: Disclaimer about how it's a joke and I'm not responsible for the drunkenness that might actually arise. 🤔

Of course, I'm just saying that despite the craziness that has happened - see the Moderation sub-forum - there's no denying that there has been a lot of people I would not have met without this place, and many more that I am happy to write and collaborate together with. ♥

With that said, I will admit that I used to have taken everything a little too seriously until not-too-long ago. Just take it easy a bit and enjoy the friends and the company.
