I was tempted to listen to some metal since I felt like I needed something more upbeat (Some of the post-rock I was listening to WAS upbeat, especially with metal influence, but still), but I guess I decided to do with in between too mellow and metal.

YouTube: This video was flagged for inappropriate content. You sure you want to proceed?

I'M AN ADULT NOW, YOUTUBE! YOU DON'T EVEN NEED TO ASK DAMNIT! I thought you were stupid enough for being like "You have to be 18 to watch this" for rated M for mature video games despite the trailer had stuff in it I could watch when I was 13 with no problems.

Anyway, interesting song.

Tom Waits-Hold On

He has a lot of big albums. Like, multiple albums with 16 songs in them, and not technically short songs in them either.

Third Reich from the Sun was flagged? :/

I'm already out of a metal mood. Now it's... I'm not sure what this is but I like it. Medieval electronic. A friend I showed it to just now described it as industrial and folk.

I think it was the AMV video that was flagged. People said probably more for epilepsy reasons then "Inappropriate content"

I don't say this often, and it is only used for rare occasions for me, but this guy has one of the most awesome voices ever.

I am usually either metal or electro (aggrotech, industrial, etc.)

Not really, but you know how people are. Especially overly sheltering parents who are just annoying and make their kids sheltered from the realities of the world.

I have a Grandma who tells me I should listen to "happy music", and I'm just like "Why?". Next time someone says that I'm going to say "I will if you listen to more dark music"

Oh, and a aunt who I should a mellow song and they were like "This song is so depressing!", and they generally act like any time some grim story is mentioned they must always get to being happy and jolly with something else. It just feels too, I dunno, like they don't really want to know the realities of things like the meat industry, the hells of various countries in the world, and so on.

Then there's various other entertaining family stories but they're not really important ☐

Neither is what I said, but yeah.

Thankfully my parents were never too bad with the whole overly sheltering thing. I watched Slumdog Millionaire when I was 14, played M games since like 15 or 16, and so on. And I consider just looking at a movie or game and going "It is rated R/M they aren't allowed to watch/play that until 17!" as being overly sheltering and you should look more into it then simply that. I could go on but this isn't really the thread for it.

I was sheltered to the point of dysfunctionality when they kicked me out of the house and into the cold unforgiving world I was never allowed to see, due to having been raised in a village which is perfect for fundie parenting.

I wasn't allowed to watch Pokemon because it was Satanic. That gives you an idea of the hell I was born into.

I should also point out that being overly strict as parents (Like not being able to watch Pokemon because it is Satanic) is as bad as sheltering your kids too much...

Sorry you had to go through that, Luveria.
