Good stuff. I still need to listen to more of World's End Girlfriend, but they/he have/has a lot of albums. It'd be easier if it was on Spotify. I think I heard he/they have/has written like, 600+ songs....

Battles-Atlas.

Still my favorite Battles song I've heard. It's perfectly weird for Little Big Planet, too, though that's definitely not the first place I've heard it.

I think you may be interested in checking out this song/band Azrael, but I have no idea what you'd actually think of it.

Unless I've showed you it before, of course, which is perfectly possible...

"Skinny Love" by Bon Iver because I listened to the Birdy cover recently and can no longer remember how the original goes for some reason.

Battles-Rainbow.

Actually, this one might be my favorite.

I think if you are going to use effects on your voice, THIS is how you should use it. Pretty much how Battles uses it on all their songs....in a creative way, to add to the music. Not that auto-tune crap that doesn't even sound that exciting that people use just so they can be in tune. I like when bands experiment with effects on their voice, like Battles does. Same with how Amon Tobin has a few songs where he's got parts that sound like a girls singing, but it's just him having effects on himself.

Dir En Grey - Obscure

Their most viewed song on YouTube, most likely because of the notable promo video, which a lot of people generally find greatly disturbing. Hehe.

Deadpool Theme - Marvel vs. Capcom.

I think this song really does the character justice. Its confusing lyrics help show his insanity, while the intruments help show how awesome he is.
