Every crime involving death is punished with perpetual prison or death penalty, depending of the potential danger offered to the society by this person.

If it's directed against our nation, this is high treason and the degree of punishment may be chosen at will by the Princes. If directed against allied nations, loss of all political privileges and ban from political life, and extradition to the offended nation if requested. If directed against neutral or hostile countries, no punishment.

Mob justice.

That would fall under unlawful murder, which could result in a minimum punishment of 25 years in jail to a maximum of life imprisonment without parole.

Looks like AN didn't bother adding a crime. Mob justice as a form of corporal punishment has experienced a renaissance of sorts in Trump Almighty. Many prominent liberal figures such as Hillary Clinton and Nancy Pelosi have been hand-selected to test out certain forms of mob justice

That's no crime by itself, but... If ya' burn a flag ya' don't own, and/or ya' set some property on fire, ya' gonna have to repay for the damages.

Alright, a scenario: A black guy in white suit, and a white guy in a black suit come into a store. Black buy steals white smartphone and white guy steals black smartphone of the same model.

Remember, the fact, that we are semi-anarchy doesn't mena, that ya' can go around and rob random people. We still got law and order, loose as they are.

Depending on the scenario. Possibly not a crime, possibly fines or jail time.

Police corruption is police corruption, whether a bribe is taken or not. Whilst your examples are absolutely fine in this country, an officer who has been susceptible to bribery or the like would be disciplined appropriately with potential for community service and life auditing. Also they're likely to be moved department or fired depending on severity.

Regent Mew claims the UPT has no authoritarian leaders. So there'd be no offence under our laws.

Not a crime unless the other person is below the age of sexual consent, in which case it is rape, which is punishable by up to death.

Fraudulently telling your sexual partner that you're above the age of consent, having sex, then falsely pressing charges for rape.

Not a crime, for various reasons. For one: rape isn't a crime. Also, there's no age of consent; most demons originate from spawning pits where they take 6 months to reach maturity and emerge. There are human children... though it's best not to think of what befalls those in the clutches of demons.

It is a crime only if it creates disturbance or if it is done in front of minore and carries a fine of around 20$ and up to 4 days in jail.

If it becomes a matter of national security threat you will have to go trial for trying to overthrow the government and thus considered a traitor, which means that the military can execute you without trial but they normal won't do that as it tarnishes their image. Once given a lawyer the traitor will be trialed and will be probably sentenced to jail, the time that someone would do in prison would variate depending on how much damage the traitor did, in a worst case scenario the traitor can be sentenced to life in prison without parole.

Crime

by Riccilan » Sun Jul 02, 2023 3:06 pm

If the crime involves harm of another person and/or peoples, and if it involves a weapon that is used to injure or kill someone, especially one of our citizens that was not the perpetrator of the crime, that would me a median sentence of 10 years in my countries confinement and rehabilitation cell.

Interrogated harshly on the orders of the Digital Warfare Division, who will want to know how you did it and won't believe your claimed intentions.

Then a significant fraction of your life in jail, on charges that overstate what you actually did to the point of being unfair, because the DWD doesn't want to publicly admit it did a huge investigation into a lone prankster hacker, or admit how easily the computers got broken into.

If it's an outloaw, no punishment. We value them less than rocks, for rocks have not made a life out of destroying our people. Anyone can do whatever they want with them. Although they are stripped of their citizenship anyway. For actual citizens, most likely death penalty, at best lifelong psychiatric internment. Such a deranged case seems a hopeless cause and beyond redemption.

The game? What game? You think a game deserves to be elevated to a concern of the state? Why are you calling the Adjudicator hotline to report cheating in your silly game? You're sentenced to 6 months community service for wasting police resources.
