The loss of Gunther, home to the key port of Selatapura, remains a popular point for irridentist and revanchist nationalist groups in Erusea.

AN: California, as the region, is one of the provinces of the Federation of North America. Which makes me wonder why "Mexico" as a state continues to exist.

Mexico has been divided into 4 provinces: México, Aridoamerica, Chiapas, and Yucatán. México is just the only one mentioned in my (very WIP) factbooks because none of the others have any huge cities. In any case, Ecatepec de Morelos is in México State, and Ciudad de México would likely be integrated into México State if it wasn't the capital of Mexico. So even if all of the Mexican states got their own provinces, that part of the factbook would look the same.

The Qing dynasty held on to power well in to the 20th century, and appears to have been far more competent in its foreign and domestic policy than it was irl.

Less 'increasing the military might', and more, "turning a rag-tag confederation of militias into an organized fighting force".

North Germany is semi-democratic insofar as major state powers remain vested with the Kaiser, but most of its administration is the role of the Chancellor.

As early as 1897, Citizens of German colonies were divided into five classes:

Colonial citizens: Any Person of North German origin, fluent in German Language and part of North German Culture that lives in a City in one of the North German Colonies.

Colonial Settlers:

>Any Person of North German origin, fluent in German Language and part of North German Culture that lives in a Settlement in one of the North German Colonies

>Any Non-African Native person that does not qualify as a Colonial citizen but lives in a Colonial City.

Class I natives: Any Native resident of a Colonial City that adopts North German culture, primarily uses German language in their lives, wearing Western clothes, and converts to Christianity.

Class II natives: Any Native resident of a Colonial Settlement that adopts North German culture, primarily uses German language in their lives, wearing Western clothes, and converts to Christianity.

Class III natives: Any native that does not qualify as class I or II.
