Getting an economy large enough to support all of that. Also using a colossus.

Its 2027, almost twenty years ago, a storage-facility with mysterious machines was found on the moon. These machines seemed to have the ability to open portals to other dimensions. In response to this, the United Nations created the UNEEU, or United Nations Extra-Universal Exploration Unit to see what the multiverse has for them, exposing Earth to many opportunities and dangers.

What kind of brain is using Stellaris tactics for FT warfare?

The issue with FT (and PMT to an extent) is that it's Sci Fi. Ergo, it is fantasy in space. Even the most hard sci-fi of hard sci-fi nerds have to take so, so many creative liberties and assumptions just to get their humans off the ground and onto Mars, let alone space colonies around Jupiter with artificial gravity and self-sustaining oxygen and food supplies.

Therefore, using Stellaris is neither big brain nor small brain - but is simply how their particular brand of sci-fi runs.

I mean I could ask the same about HOI4, the CK games (granted, those are more about character development and LARPing), the C&C games (mods do not count in this case), and, really, most strategy games ever (from grand strategy, to RTS, even turn-based 4X).

that being said, the true universe brain here is using a mix of Cities: Skylines and Factorio (or Satisfactory, if you want to) to get material for infrastructure and logistic sperg in order to win NS wars.

I originally came to this site as part of an NS Winter surge while searching for a game like HOI4...fortunately I found this more interesting.

The middle bit is probably a cliché.

How to win MT war on NS:

Realize the days of massed divisions and army groups engaging in slugfests are over. It's incredible how many people think this is how it still works and don't realize that a highly mobile combined arms brigade or battalion tactical group can wreck their massed divisions.
