The regulations on religion are highly repressive (25 million in currency fee, at least 50,000 signatures on a petition but proselyting is illegal, and you're not allowed to join the ruling communist party), and the state conflates transness with surgery, squeezing out those who do not pursue surgical transition. I would not live in Kergstan.

Considering the 2.8bn population i don't think 50k is that much, also if only 50k people sign that'd be a one-time 500 tare per person anyways.

On the second part i definitely became more educated on things like dysphoria and in the past i thought only access to surgery was the issue, thing is i never looked the LGBT rights table anymore so that's gonna change.

I commend you for taking the time to go that deep into my factbooks to take a decision.
