Depends on the severity of the tax fraud of course, with lower amounts being a fine and higher level tax fraud being numerous years of jail time.

Unless the ducks cause mass destruction to your property or everyone else's, not a crime. If the case, you will be fined $30 and forced to bring back the ducks to where they originally belonged.

Not a crime. Disturbing the Peace is a wrist slap. Breach of peace with intent to cause a riot is usually a months wage fine, and two weeks hard labor. Rioting is half years wages and 6 months to 5 years hard labor.

Just injury? About 7 years, especially as you have a sword on you.
Injury alone is usually 6 months to 2 years depending on severity but unlawful use of a weapon carries 5 years in prison minimum.

Charged just as severely as any other form of assault. Little to no injury? Probably won't even get charged. Minor injury? Fines and/or community service. Not so severe, not so minor injury? Up to a year in house arrest or similar punishment. Severe injury? Depending on severity, up to 20 years in prison. Does the person die somehow, but killing was unintentional (second degree murder)? Depending on pleas and all factors, somewhere between 10 years and life imprisonment.
Was it first degree murder? Somewhere between 20 years and life without parole.

Then we look at animal abuse. You automatically have the cat sent to a shelter, and then you get charged. Because cats are sentient but not sapient and generally harmless, you'd receive a similar but less severe punishment as if you the injuries were inflicted on a human.

Makes you think, huh?

Being forced to repay the damages. A week spent in police station and a fine for hooliganism are also possible.

A crazy woman throws a tantrum in YN's cafe over her bagel being covered in milk chocolate instead of dark chocolate. She yells at employees and demands to speak with the manager. As manager arrives and tries to calm her down, but refuses to refund, since the woman ate half of the bagel, she just takes another bagel from a counter and throws it with impressive technique and accuracy right in the manager's eye, knocking him down and giving him a black eye. She then turns over someone's table and runs out screaming.
