Exactly. I feel the same way when it comes to Beck. I mean, just look at his album Modern Guilt. It is a great album and was released in 2009 I believe. And I get a big smile on my face when I meet another Porcupine Tree fan. They are so undersold, being such a good band, and not getting the attention I believe they deserve sometimes. Steven Wilson's solo albums are all great works as well; I own them all.

Here in Heaven, Goat Rodeo

I've only really heard some of the Loser days, and Mutations and Sea Change, so I don't really know. I have everything he's done on a playlist on Spotify, just haven't got to listening to it all...because well, I have a lot of stuff to go through.

There's actually quite a few Porcupine Tree fans here. It's actually surprised me how many people I've found on here that like things that barely get any views on YouTube. Apparently bands being great doesn't mean anything these days (Or ever, as far as I know, since in my opinion the 80's were pretty god damn bad). The popular stuff is just generic pop music with overused beats.

I think we may get along well with sharing music, like I do with a few people here.

Which leads me to the fact that you might like the above band, which I have been digging a lot recently. They have quite the large variety going, and are from Iceland...because, well....Iceland rules in the music realm apparently? I really dig the guys voice, and he really challenges himself vocally as well. And some of the beats the band plays confuses me brain....and I love beats that sound more complicated to play then the straightforward crap and messes with your mind.

my eyes aren't blind but i can't seeeee

we, unlike the bourgeoisie, have nothing to lose and therefore our expression will be the only honest one, our words will be the only challenging ones and our art will be the one revolutionary expression. We need new noise and new voices and new canvases to become something more than the last poets of a useless generation.

"The 7 Colours of the Rainbow," by Mannheim Steamroller

I like how the musical phrases are divided in a way that is consistent with the meaning of the song, in a multiple of seven. Rarely do musicians think to put that much care into the composition.

The only other example I can think of, in this moment, is when The Alan Parsons Project repeated the sixes in the timing of the song "Lucifer." (...and did other symbolic things that tied it in with other songs and concepts.)

I enjoy the level of detail some artists put into their musical expression.

Whoa, didn't expect that kind of reaction to it:P That's good, though. They need more popularity. Apparently the Iceland version of "Battle of the Bands" actually chooses bands based on talent.

Tiger Veil is probably the only song on the album I still can't really get into. It sounds too much like...Wolfmother for my liking? And I'm not a fan of Wolfmother.

One of their songs reminds me of The Mars Volta as well, but I don't find that to be a bad thing. Which, both of those shows the variety this guy can do, and I find it awesome in that regard. But they do a great variety anyway. I mean, mid-album, you got an extremely mellow song followed by an upbeat song. Great band. One of my favorite Icelandic bands now.

Yay, someone who can appreciate more mellow forms of music (at least, the first one)>

And I agree. I love bands that are artistic and creative as well. Like how Bjork always has the weirdest freaking artistic videos and dresses weirdly, and how Sigur Ros' singer Jonsi does the weird outfit part as well, and they have a lot of videos with good meaning too. And, with Sigur Ros, how for this album they gave a bunch of random filmmakers small sums of money and told them to do whatever they felt like to their music, and there are going to be 12 "Mystery Film Experiment" films in the end. I find that cool, and some really cool artistic videos have come out of it.

You might like this song. That's what your first song reminded me of, for some reason.
