It's... definitely better as it is now, I think.

The real problem I've got with slavery threads is how it's not uncommon for them to just be a thinly-veiled attempt at trolling.

Not to call out anyone, but I dislike this trend, too. I should post some pro-capitalist ones that are well-written just to be contrary and to add more diversity of opinion.

I wish there were more meme posts in that thread, too.

No, you don't get it bro. Those huge empires that boast over their badass technologically advanced militaries and the giant robots from a toy franchise need slave labor bro! More power to them...but it just feels tacky and illogical.

Only grimdark dark fantasies and PMT/FT dystopias with genetically engineered laborers ever seem to pull off slavery well.

How embarrassing as a history student to overlook those.

Still, I reiterate, I don't mind as long as it's self-consistent in the setting. But as Aikoland said, a lot of that crap just seems to be made for shock value and/or possible trolling. I remember a few years ago that furies were like always what was being sold in those threads to flex on furies. It just feels badly-written. And then there was the implied sex slave stuff...

TL;DR, be dark or edgy if you want, but don't you dare make me read possible plot holes.

Oh, yeah, it's definitely most often for shock value when it's done in GE&T, and honestly if you're going to do slavery it's probably best to keep it to your own lore and not really parade it about, since, you know... "LOOKIE HERE WE GOT DA SLAVES" can't really ever go well, can it?

It's a topic that I particularly avoid just out of personal preference as well, because... yeah, most states in this setting probably condone slavery. They've no reason not to. Does that mean I'm going to write about it unless I need to? Nope.

Shameless self-plug: I told myself that I would let the Valentians volunteer themselves as a construction company and for irresistible prices so that we can undermine the slavery thing. I have not done anything on that front yet...

Though that does mean we are going to be working 24/7, but imagine Valentijn just putting stuff like Lego. Far, far better than having a thousand starving slaves.

I should get working on that GE&T OP. I want to do it as a tongue-in-cheek thing, but also hopefully as a gag that should NOT go for that long.

Don't get me wrong, stories with slavery/indentured servitude/caste systems can be very enjoyable if it allows people to reflect on said issues and themes if the idea and lore are well fleshed out. I think Caligolus and Khoronzon deserve a lot of appreciation for it.

Another delightful F7 cliché: no matter how hard you try to create a question-and-answer game, there will always be someone who will only answer yes / no, thus breaking the chain and no one will mind the rules in OP anymore.

I don't know if it really counts as a cliché, but how often does it happen to you that you look at the "Latest Forum Topics", and see one topic that you first thought was a RP, but then you read the rest of the line, and realize that's from General, and it's about something that actually happened in the real world.

Sometimes I see threads and I think they are in General, but it turns out they are from an RP. I've become desensitized.
