I can't imagine running three or four nations, let alone 98. I don't know how he does it.

Eh, I'd contest that. The difficulty in moving people off-planet and supporting them indefinitely there, especially in the early days of space travel, is most likely going to lead to a serious population bottleneck barring serious reductions in the ease of transporting mass offworld, and I'd argue that given the population controls that would likely be instituted by small colonies without the ability to generate reliably high quantities of CHNOPS on their own it'd be unlikely for spacefaring settlements to grow their populations very quickly at all.

Then again I might be entirely wrong and you might be entirely right, who knows?

I've seen like less than a billion people average spread across a few planets and idk it seems like it'd be hard to hold territory like that against anyone who wanted to just roll up on them.

This is a good post.

I personally tried to mitigate this by choosing what's already in place in both Australia and New Zealand since it shares the geography/location. Tanks are epic, but in Drongonia they don't make a lot of sense outside of the city/town areas, as there is a lot of muddy farmland, as well as just hills/mountains/forest area. Instead, I am trying to go with a larger navy/air force to accommodate. Also, boosting the soldier-side equipment and working on some sort of exosuit (another NS cliché lol).

Please everyone try to follow Socialist Macronesia's advice.

You actually have a limited military, though. You don't have a thousand tanks and 10,000,000 soldiers and five carrier groups, you actually have stuff you could legitimately afford as a nation. You can use cliched doctrine as long as you use it well and/or sparingly. You seem to have gone for the former, but I do see the latter in your work, too. You're good for the most part; others, not so much.

I can absolutely agree with the aircraft carrier part. Most nations don't even need one, let alone multiple carrier battle groups. But I don't think writing off tanks as unnecessary is the way to go. I think the bigger thing with tanks is a lot of people on NS forget that tanks need infantry support and vice versa. As for cypasting US doctrine, I think some of that has to do with American field manuals and info on how American combat units are organized being pretty readily available on the internet. I take no shame in admitting my army is organized around cypaste US Army brigade combat teams just with different equipment.

1. Tanks do need infantry support, but infantry doesn't necessarily need tank support. Tanks aren't necessary, infantry absolutely is.

2. Tanks are effective, but a lot of the NS nations I see have environments that would be directly hostile to the concept of a tank as a whole. My point is not that tanks are obsolete, my point is that not every nation on NS needs them, but most have them anyway.

Tanks are a propaganda tool as much as an actual military tool. Same with various other impractical equipment. New Zealand absolutely had no capacity for tanks in the Second World War yet they built the damned things anyway (no matter how meme-worthy they were as an actual combat unit). There are weapons that would realistically be ridiculous for your country to have, but I'd say having a few tanks, even if for just propaganda purposes, is better than having no tanks at all.

Well, I can say with certainty that I'm sort of guilty when it comes to simply copy + pasting doctrines in my nations, although a lot of them are C&C so it kind of has some sense as to why. Though, in contrast, when it comes to my two non-C&C puppets, UNSPDC and Estado Americano de Espana, I try to make the doctrine stand out instead of simply "hm yes funny tank can kill stuff because it's RTS", with the former, it's focused on strike teams, with large-scale battles being mentioned in passing, and with the latter, well... I tend to associate Spain with Guerrilla Warfare, so you can guess what I did with the Guardia Nacional.

About needing ten million tanks or CSGs, yeah, they can be good when used but if they make the doctrine stale or break the budget? Nah, not going for that. With Estado Americano, I only have like two CSGs, and even then those are just frigates and cruisers guarding two light aircraft carriers. imo having light carriers is much more distinctive than 'massive supercarrier that can fit 9999 planes'.

I prefer not to.

I'm sticking to high mobility rocket cars (that can serve both as artillery and direct fire missions) with infantry with DMR's portable rockets and Mines, and E-tools to make hasty foxholes in a half days worth time. Planes with rockets, SAM's that are rockets and portable, portable radar cars, Submarines, sub marine low flying effect hunters with sonobouy and anti-ship and sub missiles, fast moving e-boats with anti-ship missiles, low profile insertion boats, and small and fast moving missile boats with like 80 some missiles. No aircraft carriers and no MBT. Armoured Rocket cars replace that role. No tracked vehicles in my armed force.

As far as I can tell, tanks these days are mostly optimised for fighting other tanks. I imagine that you could better allocate you defence budget by allocating that MBT money towards APCs or attack helicopters. There are other, cheaper ways to counter a tank than another tank.

Oh yes, but tanks are imposing and cool, which is why dictatorships and authoritarian countries like to show them off at parades. Hell, even non authoritarian states have done it from time to time simply because tanks are an item of national pride, like how a battleship would be a national object of pride in the early 20th century. Tanks are perfect for propaganda to show that you have tanks and are able to use them, even if you just have barely enough to fill a brigade.

Honestly yeah. I don't have the knowledge nor the interest to write a totally unique doctrine, but the few times I do peek into military threads it's just an endless race for the coolest, most expensive tank/carrier/bomber/gun that has a per unit cost on par with the GDP of small nations for no reason other than pure aesthetic. Blanjiland's military isn't very unique, but that's because it's a hodgepodge of corporations bleeding the government dry of every dollar they can by deliberately building expensive, high-tech piles of rubble that both suck in combat and by-design made to fall apart so the government keeps buying new, even more expensive weapons platforms (also the head of the military is also the CEO of the largest weapons manufacturer). I think if you're going to make a generic military that's basically just the US Armed Forces with a new coat of paint, at least give it a twist. ~~Who knows, it could even be used to say something about your nation's wider culture beyond "war good, tank cool".~~

An Oligarchic state where the ultra-rich govern a nation of entrepreneurs and innovators. Just as corrupt, hedonistic and materialistic as you think, despite its progressive policies and emphasis on quality of life.

At least where it counts. Most nations with a doctrine themed around air power go for the cliché of "strike jet, air superiority jet" and maybe they throw in "STEALTH OWO" if they're reading about the F-35. I've been trying to break away from that with the VALV, but even then it still feels kind of tropey.

And while we're on the topic of military clichés, what is it with nations' military units that are very clearly outnumbered, outflanked, outgunned, surrounded on all sides by enemy troops, getting pounded by artillery, and cut off from support... that always end up staging a breakout at the last minute and going on to inflict massive enemy casualties? And if I'm being honest, refusing to take losses in combat remains one of the biggest tropes in II and NS RPs, even if it's one of the most egregious ones of all.
