Curiously enough, the green onion on their flag represents a kind of Carpe Diem-esque optimism. Apparently waving it around was associated with early morning wake-the-fuck-up rituals.

Their technology is so advanced that direct energy-to-matter conversions is commonplace and widespread. Given the immense amount of energy one would require to get even a tiny amount of mass, this leads one to assume that they must also possess technologies that make energy generation practically inconsequential.

Occitania is physically located mainly in the area of IRL France, but also controls Northern and Eastern Spain as well as colonies across the world. Its provinces use the actual, real names of the provinces, including the Spanish ones. The form of government is a Federal Parliamentary Constitutional Monarchy, and it has both an Empress and Prime Minister. The armed forces also appear to consist of a void of pure blackness which consumes everything it touches, because that's what I see when I click that factbook!

Kaltovar actually seems to be a semi-sentient nation, ran by advanced computers, all tasked with being part of its thinking centers, and it also appears people themselves are now wishing to adopt traits similar to the thinking centers, especially within the nature of faster thinking.

Am I able to look into these ideas myself? I'm currently running a nation I call a Technocracy or a society ran by an AI (Techno just means machine mind) so something similar but not exactly the same would be a nice touch to my nation, but I would not add it without your consent.

They are situated on a massive Colony Ship in the Halcyon system, and have several representatives of the Sildorian Empire on board. I find this highly uncharacteristic, as I would have expected the humans on that ship to have been turned into dog or bird chow by the Sildans.

Before WWII, Arcadia modernized their navy by adding missile launchers (allowing them to bypass naval treaties regarding limitations on guns) and radar. Pearl Harbor is called Eureka Harbor in this universe. Imperial Japan was soundly defeated a year earlier through a land invasion of Kagoshima (and nukes didn't seem to be involved).

On face value, it's "what if Japan was ruled by Hatsune Miku?". Well, there's more depth to that. Apparently, they were founded by Hatsune Miku, and followed a path parallel, but at the same time distant, from that of RL Japan. Today, they have double Japan's population and landmass, have a constitutional monarchy, and have colonies in Mikuronesia (I see what you did there). Technologically and militarily superior to today's Japan, they also have nukes.

The fact that the factbook, The World Which We Wander, is still considered a WIP and yet there are a lot of great stuff in it already! Loads of content, good design, good visuals! This is like the King of WIPs. ♡🇹🇼 That aside, I quite like how on the world map, Antarctica is neatly divided by straight lines. I wonder if it causes problems in projections, if any.

Also this from the Trivia factbook, which, of course, is one of the factbooks that I read about another nation: The name Richard is a common name in English, though instead of being pronounced RITSH-ard it's pronounced RICK-hard.

That sounds like something a SE Asian would pronounce it as, and I can say that because I am a SE Asian myself and we have really strange pronunciations. 🤔
