Crime of theft of an object of small value, but committed against a person completely incapable of offering a reaction due to being infant.

Penalty - half a year to 1 and a half years in jail under the United Empire Model Penal Code, but some provinces have increased sentences.

Not really a problem, because most crossings are mini bridges or tunnels, but you'd be removed by the police and fined 150 Poloniums per minute.

That would be a civil matter, not a criminal one. For example if you were breaching a patent, trademark or copyright then you could be sued into oblivion and you can have your assets seized if you sell a licensed product without a license--otherwise, there's no problem, that's just the free market creating competition.

Littering and public nuisance punishments depend on city/county, and may amount to fines, community service, a few nights in jail, or some combination of the three.

Hrm... I mean, that is not specifically banned by law, but you'll probably be done for:

- Littering
- Destruction of Property
- Disturbing Public Order
- Improper disposal of biological waste

Which alone would get you a hefty fine. Depending on... I mean, if this is after you've been told to leave, it's also Illegal Trespass, maybe even Breaking and Entering depending on how you do it, and at that point there's so much that you're looking at some months in prison.

If your boss is still there, it's not Trespassing or B&E, but you'll definitely get done for SOME kind of assault, possibly of the sexual kind. Which again, definitely jail.

In general, I would advise that you do not.

Not providing aid to someone in mortal peril despite being able to?

Monetary fine, confiscation of handgun, and jail-time not exceeding 5 months.
Rifle, shotgun, incendiary, & automatic-type weapons are prohibited for civilian use and automatically classified as unregistered firearms.
