We need your Communist Fardelshufflestein for the intra-regional memes!

Yes, I do agree that we should cap the puppets before we become Public Enemy #1. As long as the puppets (one of which is mine, though I have not used it on the forums) do not inundate F7, we the puppets should be able to sustain ourselves.

People copying easily reproducible thread concepts here in F7.

See also: the recent trend (that still has some stragglers) of 'NS sings' threads or the (was it last year? earlier this year?) trend of Plus and Minus: [Insert Two Opposed Concepts Here] threads.

^ This. The (near) exception to that are the CK2 / HOI4-based threads, and even those suffer from burnouts. So.... yeah, even the relatively popular games (for NSers) like Paradox Interactive's games can't handle that well because not a lot of people have knowledge about the games. This spells doom with other games/media/franchise. e.g. If I created a thread on "What would ANs national powers be in Rise of Nations?" would flop because as much as I love that game, it really doesn't have a good userbase.

EDIT: Another cliché: Those that kills the NS Stats in "creative" ways. Those are an utter annoyance. Yes, it doesn't make sense for some nations and even I don't use it for a few nations here and there. It's okay if you don't, just say it straight. Trying to be "funny" by excessively hating them is absurdity at its finest.

I know it's not really an F7 cliché, but how about users who join this site, are here for all of like two days, and then go make a thread in Technical basically asking the admins to completely rebuild the game from the ground up by adding any or all of the following:

- A war feature
- A trading feature
- The ability to choose what issues you get
- The ability to choose your own tax rate
- The ability to just micromanage your nation stats in general.

- A trading feature

We technically got the Trading Cards, so... close enough! 🤔

But yeah, for those options, there's always Politics & War, which personally is not for me. I have no qualms with that game (apart from having my eyes assaulted by faction adverts that needs a paywall to make them go away), but there's a reason why I (along with most) came here for free-to-do-whatever nature of factbooks, RPs, and the like. I just like the freedom instead of relying on one single mechanics or getting constantly assaulted. ^^;

An F7 cliché: one-liner responses. Fuck, I hate them. I hate how you sometimes have to reply in one-liners. I feel like... the above nation's gone to all this effort to write their factbook, and the below nation reads it and goes "das cool bruh". Like... can they at least return the favor somewhat? I feel bad every time I leave a one-line response.

I'm kinda guilty about this, but most of the time, if I make a one liner, I at least try to make it about the AN rather than just saying something generic.

What I have noticed is an increase in newly registered users who create an "international incident" thread with a post like: "I declare war on all capitalist/communist nations!" Or in minor cases: "We are persecuting and killing all gays!"

This will be followed by all the letters of condemnation and threats of war that lead to absolutely nothing. If I were in the other players, I would completely ignore this kind of thread. It only serves to give attention to something so empty while it doesn't deserve it.

And yes, this was already mentioned in this thread, but...

...most nations being either well-functioning liberal democracies (admittedly Piste-Land is one of them) or mature, consolidated authoritarian systems.

Hybrid regimes, flawed democracies, and weak authoritarian regimes, which can potentially yield a lot of great lore material, are quite rare, though it seems that they've recently been growing in number.

Same goes for Southern Thelarai, though to a somewhat lesser degree. No one's hands are squeaky-clean.

I also noticed that when updating the NSPoliteia Index's previous lists, to the point of temporarily deciding not to include yet another run-of-the-mill full democracy, instead prioritizing a potential anocracy in its place.

TBH I think a big reason why most NS nations are either just ordinary functioning liberal democracies or well-controlled authoritarian regimes is just because it's easier to write those and I also would imagine that most users here live in countries that would classify as the former, so they'll just write what they know.

Valentine Z wrote:

TBH the recent trend of 'killing' NS stats in people's sigs just feels like the exact opposite of some years back when people would put shit like 'Yes I use NS stats because I actually play the game!' or 'People who don't use NS stats just can't accept that they're bad at governing' or 'Only newbies don't use NS stats' in their sigs.

Shout out to anyone else who remembers that one user who utterly refused to acknowledge IC stats at all and there'd often end up being arguments whenever they used NS stats for a user who very much did not use them here in the good old days of F7. (Personally, I feel that doing something like that is a huge dick-move and a sign of being a poor player more than anything else, like imagine being the type of person to completely disregard the hard work someone has put into their nation's canon and world just because 'ONLY NS STATS ARE VALID!!! NOTHING ELSE!!!! STOP IGNORING NS STATS!!!' Also I

How about "flawed meme constitutional monarchies" 🤔? Admittedly, WF is just not fully developed yet, so who am I to say whether or not our gov is cliché? (Forgive me if I inadvertently fish for compliments. Not my goal here! Just discussing clichés!)

I think this was mentioned earlier, but NS leaders who are overpowered/perfect with no real personality flaws (that are addressed by the plot). That's not exclusive to NS, though.

Honestly, the way I've dealt with them is just to match the AN's effort. If they leave a low-effort response, why should I bother with them? On the other hand, if they've put plenty of effort, and written out this nice paragraph-long reply, then of course, I'll write one of my own.

I understand that if everyone did that, we'd just be in an endless loop of one-liners should ever a low effort response pop up, so it's not exactly a solution. Still, gets me to sleep soundly at night.

Yeah but then you get into the argument of:

'You didn't put effort in to your post!'

'Who cares?'

'I do!'

'It's just a game!'
