Despite residing in a region known for some degree of religious fervor, the primary heads of state are both non-religious. Huh.

That's not strictly true. Granted Occitania's head of government, Prime Minister Azalai's Cazenave-Maysonet, is officially non-religious, Occitania's head of state, Aletsandra IV, is Cathar.

The Followers of Apocalypse is a humanitarian organization built on the principles of mutual aid that offers medical and humanitarian aid to those who need it and provides free education across the Cybusian Empire. Its origins can be found in the latter years of the Orsonian Rebellion.

I changed Azalais to non-religious not too long ago as being religious didn't really fit her character, but she was Cathar before that. Aletsandra IV has always been Cathar, though.

That they have successfully rewritten the laws of physics with their creation of tachyon particles, which I am assuming means they have discovered a way to generate infinite energy. Mass travelling at or above the speed of light becomes infinite, and so therefore must the energy required to move it.

WW2 erupted differently than it did in our timeline, with the Fascists and Communist powers united in a pact to take down the liberal capitalist nations of Western Europe. Occitania had the manpower and technology to halt the USSR though and tip the balance in favor of the West though, which was rightfully a bigger threat than the Nazis.

Interstellar Silver is a private areospace and space mining company. It has dismantled five asteroids, launched the fastest space probe, the Vasco de Gama, as well as the fastest rocket to reach orbit. They have plans to send humans to the closest star, Alpha Centauri.

As a nation, Las Palmeras exists peacefully in the Caribbean Islands, they've got neko there (which I'll admit is somewhat ebic), they're also banned from starting an offensive war if I read it correctly, and they've also exported some weird metals named carolinium and uranium.
