"While the way he lives may be admirable and something that sounds like a hell of a time his political views and policies are something I could never condone, no respect for traditional values, thinking society doesn't need a large and powerful government to solve its problems, and he seems to hate the truism that some races and ethnic groups are simply superior to others. He doesn't seem fit to be the leader of a country if you can even call their borderline anarchic society that even if I do like him marginally better than his predecessor"-High General Artyom Bishop

Why have so many I've seen been so evil?"

I find it very hard to blame the Irish—or a small handful of them—for those actions in the long run. Though I'm not gonna fully get into the nuanced world of neighborly love and ethno-religious shenanigans that goes on in Northern Ireland, from what can be seen, you're talking about the Irish mainland and not the contested strip, which makes me ask...what the hell are your people doing there? Clearly, they're not welcome. And don't bother replying with any 'they're an autonomous part of the Commonwealth' crap; your history states that they were browbeaten by your army into it in 1921, it wasn't a first choice. And trust me, I've had a fair amount of time to reflect on unfair treaties, considering my government's desire to even if I don't like it, personally.

Sorry for a lack of better words; I know that it sucks that your parents got killed, from a personal perspective it'd be monstrous to deny that and the mental fortitude to carry on is admirable by your part. Losing the people who raised you that way, having their lives cut short violently, that wasn't an ideal outcome.

Nova, Station Chief of US Observers Group
But your government that's denying a nation its independence, and ideally, I don't think your people should be in Ireland at all. At the very least if your government's gonna be the bad guy about it, at least have the finesse to do things more indirectly like the USA does in Latin America, well, post-Girán anyways...or like we do in the United States sometimes. If not for the sake of the Irish, for your people that will get bombed and shot at in more occasions as long as the Irish insurgents continue to maintain some kinda historical legitimacy, which they will.

Now that the elephant in the room's been addressed, eeeeh, what else is there to say? I guess you've been cast and molded to exemplify an ideal monarch. Uhhh, the cool-headed and familiar landowning military elite of bygone years, that is. Cool for your people if they're into that, I guess, but I'm not really keen on hereditary social privileges. I hope those social programs are a decent tradeoff, as vague as they are described."

[1] Literally "Earth".

[2] Obviously "milk of the chike", or "milk of seed of chike", means sperm or semen, with "chike" translating into "penis".

[3] "Fyirumeisch" is a vague Feyris word that can translate to "cursed, creepy, eerie, scary, weird".

[4] "Byishyi" is a complex Feyris concept of gender analogous to femininity, and the word often translates to "girl", "woman", "faerie girl".

[5] "Chike and "shyifu" translates into "penis and vagina". i.e The gender (femininity) of a human being is unrelated to their genitals i.e a tirade against gender essentialism/gender binary.

[6] With the previous sentence, the context is becoming clear. By appealing to Feyris concepts of gender, Ryeischbyi is asking why the Ahnu needs to go to human men in order to reproduce again, along with concepts of gender binary. The "faerie girl" here is most likely a femboy/transgender woman/intersex?

[7] Princess Ryuna, though an anachronistic reference in this case, is the Faerie-Goddess of the Moon, while Aenwyn Ranscheid is the Faerie-Goddess of heavens and weather.

Sablin is a man without an ideology. He has no mandate, no goal. He preaches utopia, yet what utopia does he preach? He is too young to thoroughly understand the political landscape, he has no ideology except "I support good thing". Do you know what that is? A populist. A manipulator. A no-good snake, whose entire ideology is based on hollow words. While I am more than certain that he has potential, he should not be allowed hold such power at such a young age, lest he fall prey to powers beyond his control.

Then again... my approach also has flaws, we have to plug with our commitment to the cause and power of friendship and underhanded solutions... I admit it. But still...

What I can say, is that I like and respect him as a poet and writer, who made contributions to the art and culture of his country. But I don't like him as politician. "Our values are rather similar, but there are differences. She is more socialist inclined than us, and she decided to turn inward, rather than go internationalist like we do. Her revolution is very unlike the one we had, for it was bloodless. The king had yielded without fighting and bloodshed, while on our lands, the revolution was of bloodshed and fire everywhere, with Edgar meeting a violent death from our hands. Either way, we are similar, but different at the same time. We both want equality and freedom, but we use different methods. And different degrees of extremism, as she is more moderate and we are more radical in terms of freedoms. But we are more centrist in terms of economy, as we are more of a social democratic model, than socialist. Still, I think, that on grounds of common cause, at least limited cooperation is possible, that could be possibly expanded further if she wishes to do so. "A lot has changed ever since I gave my opinion on Chimi Akagi, but my opinions have not. I still do believe she is an intelligent individual who has made some significant contributions to the scientific community, and her advanced technology skills still remain impressive. I also do admire her victory in achieving a Nobel Prize in medicine. I also learned she founded her country to be a safeguard place for refugees fleeing a disaster at Okinawa, and for that, I commend her. Now let's look at her as a leader. I agree with many of her decisions and the policies she has implemented, such as gun control and universal healthcare. She is a very caring individual who looks after her people, and that's what is so appreciable about her. Overall, Dr. Akagi is an intelligent, caring, and commanding leader. The establishment of her country is what I consider honorable. For this alone, I shall add on to your list of awards and convey upon you the Crossoverian Order of Peace, an award given to people who have done extremely honorable things to safeguard the wellbeing of their people. You are an honorable person, Dr. Akagi. I commend you for all you've done."
