I try that.....and usually sound terrible and die from my failed singing
□ Though, I've definitely proved, without any lessons at all. I've just improved from singing along to my music I like, and I've improved from that. Like before, I could not sing any high notes whatsoever. Now I can actually hit the notes better in Sigur Ros songs, but I'm still not great. It's better then attempting it at all and my voice just cutting out □

I used to not really like metal. I don't really know why. I think I just listened to the wrong metal. And I'm naturally a guy who prefers more mellow music anyway. But now I quite like some metal. Haven't really listened to Slipknot though.

But either way, in no way can I listen to metal all the time. Limiting myself to only metal would bore me anyway, and make me feel like I don't have a very big variety of music tastes. But I pretty much like a little of everything.

Puscifer-Man Overboard.

Not sure what genre you would call this.
