That whole album has a very weird variety.

I just consider post-metal to be metal with post-rock elements in it, and I don't see that at all in Neurosis.

Journalist Simon Reynolds writes that "the term post-metal seems increasingly useful to describe the vast and variegated swath of genres (the thousand flavors of doom/black/death/grind/drone/sludge/etc., ad infinitum) that emerged from the early '90s onward.

It sounds like a redundant genre. If categorizing Neurosis as industrial/sludge/doom fits, then I do not see a need for post-metal.

I'm sticking with my post-metal meaning metal with post-rock elements to it ☐

Like Russian Circles

But you could argue that just sounds like sludge metal or something, too, I guess, but I still hear a mix between like post-rock and post-metal so I just go with that.

Edit: Okay, this whole YouTube copyright claim bullshit recently is getting out of hand. Video game companies and such have already come out saying that some of these claims having absolutely nothing to do with them. I didn't used to blame YouTube, just the people in charge of the specific songs or whatever, but recently it sounds like a shitty new copyright bot system by YouTube.

So far not even metal, and it is 15 minutes long. It's actually kind of just one big drum solo almost.

Seems to be a YouTube thing. They made a statement about it.

All I know is it is messing up a BUNCH of people that even companies are defending from it, and saying they'll take care of it.

3 big ass albums done now.

Neurosis-Given to the Rising

Edit: Big ass being over 60 minutes long. Going through Swans will make these "big ass" albums feel small.

Ugh, albums missing a song on Spotify. I don't understand why they so commonly have ONE song missing.

You're the one who complained before, aren't you? We post here because it gives us something mindless to do. We're not trying to be 'special snowflakes', as stated before. And as stated before, there are THREADS elsewhere specifically for discussing music, so we discuss music mostly there.

But there is actually quite a bit of general random discussion in here every now and then.

And The Knife is one of my favorite bands. Their album this year is very likely to be my Album of the Year.

Microsol reminds me of Charmicarmicat.

It's usually people who accuse everyone else of having 'Special Snowflake Syndrome' who themselves have Special Snowflake Syndrome, or they wouldn't feel the need to constantly insult and criticize people without any provocation, especially when it's for having done nothing more than someone saying they like a band. "OH LOLOL YOU SPECIAL SNOWFLAKE SAYING YOU LIKE A BAND."

These instruments they add to some of their songs...piano, bagpipes, flute, whatever the hell this is in this song (can't place it), they make a good sludge metal song great and unique-sounding.

This album, which is from 2012, his singing almost sounds exactly like it did 16 years ago...Pretty impressive to have your vocals sound so close to your younger self.
