Churches are extremely rare in Tangatarehua as most were burned in the anti-Christian pogroms of the 1920s however vandalising any form of property carries a fine of K400,000 (NSD$2,000) + community service (usually to repaint the building you defaced.)

Refusing to vacate the road after fair warning (3 honks is usually considered fair warning), it's legal for motorists to run them over or otherwise remove them from the road by any means necessary, up to and including deadly force.

If the police manage to get to them first, caning + 1 year prison time but may be aggravated up to life in prison depending on the circumstances.

First or second offenders may be mandated by court to pay the victim however much it costs to replace the tyre, as well as given a formal warning, but face no prison time. Repeat offenders may face criminal damage charges, which theoretically has a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison, but unless the defendant slashed a dozen carparks' worth of tyres, the sentence for this would usually be 2 to 6 months in prison plus a fine for damages.

There's no crime in that. We preach total religious freedom in our nation.

What they will do or fail to do may or may not be charged as a crime. But having their cult by itself is not a crime.
