Thanks for the recs. I already know those three bands though. Kamelot is pretty good and Celtic Frost is legendary. I haven't really liked anything Korn's done since the 90s though.

My sister loves Kamelot, and it's her favorite band. I definitely dig some Celtic Frost. I'm more of the type that really digs the mellow metal, which the mellow songs of Kamelot are some of my favorites (Love You To Death and Abandoned). As a whole though, like with pretty much any metal band, I'm selective on what songs I actually like of them. As far as Korn goes, I actually haven't listened to them much to know what I like of them. But again, I only like a select few of their songs. I actually like their newest album, because they were experimental and tried a new thing: Mixing Dubstep artists with Metal, and it was actually cool in my opinion. I like when bands mix things up. But still, I don't like all of their stuff on the new album.

I like some Tool as well (which is a mixture of things), though I figure you probably know about Tool. Also, Porcupine Tree has some definite more metalish stuff, but these guys have a huge variety....of awesomeness ☐

Porcupine Tree-Flicker.

Yeah, I love both Tool and Porcupine Tree as well. Tool's "Lateralus" album and Porcupine Tree's "Fear of a Blank Planet" are among my favorite albums.

If you like mellow metal, I think a lot of doom metal and ambient black metal would be right up your alley.

I really do need to listen to more Tool than I have. I'll get to that eventually, like I need to do with a lot of bands. I don't think I've heard much of that Porcupine Tree album yet, though.

I know a couple of drone metal bands that I quite like, which I believe is more mellow than doom metal:

Asva. This song's great, though it definitely starts out slow. I dig the whole song though, but when it kicks in it's pretty awesome.

Sunn 0}}}. This song's just all around gloomy and rather creepy.

Aww man, I was going to join in with the Gojira stuff, but I think I got rid of my Gojira playlist for some reason, and I don't remember what song I actually liked.

Fiona Apple-Every Single Night.

So I will just post new Fiona Apple instead.
