An immediate incarceration and depending on the severity of the murder and the quantity of the victim and extrapolating on the additional pain which the victim potentially suffers before death, in addition to the state's strict secularity policy and atheistic approach on religion issues, the minimum sentence is 40 years in prison with the maximum being a death sentence.

That's an instant death penalty, no take backs.

If it's really alive again, then that isn't actually an offence, mostly because no government here has anticipated it being possible in the first place, but the rules about keeping dangerous pets and the potential penalties for any harm & damage that the animal might cause will apply.

If it's [corporeal] undead, instead then you'd better lay it back to "rest" (or give the authorities your full cooperation in their own efforts to do this, if doing it yourself isn't possible), and be able to prove that reanimating it was an accident, because being convicted of deliberately creating or sustaining the existence of any corporeal undead carries a mandatory death penalty. (So too does knowingly helping them to enter the country from outside.) If somebody is executed for this reason then a ritual is carried out to keep [i]them[i] from returning as any form of undead, their own body is are cremated, the ashes are mixed with blessed salt and then split into several batches, each batch is are buried in a different location (that isn't accessible to the general public), all of their property is confiscated, and no memorial to them is allowed.

Even if yiu can prove that raising it was accidental, and cooperated fully with th authorities, you will probably face Criminal Negligence charges (and Negligent BearSlaughter charges if it killed anybody) und will need to give a verry good story about why you were doing whatever it was that went wrong to cause this effect.

p.s. If it's really a Tyrannosaur, rather than something more like Godzilla, then it isn't going to "destroy half your city", it simply isn't tough enough to take down solidly-constructed buildings without injuring itself and therefore probably will make only one or two attempts at doing so. Also, because of historical & current threats, our armed forces and police SWAT teams usually have access to weapons that are designed for taking down large & possibly supernaatural monsters.

Administering a hallucinogenic drug to somebody without getting that person's informed consent first.
