General-President Lutsao Baije would sit in front of a TV, feeling mildly awkward and slowly munching on some crispy fire flakes. Occasionally some air may snort out of his nose but most of the time he was just stuck in a confused stupor. As the trio have their escapades in their custom-made RVs, Lutsao pauses the video, resting his beak on his wing and sitting their in silent contemplation.

He would attempt to speak a few times, opening his beak, only to then close it again as he lost his own words. Five minutes would pass by as he was lost in silent contemplation, before finally he managed to speak up.

"One... Who the hell let you rule a country, especially with that track record of PR nightmares and... garish unseriousness? Who even elected you three to manage any number of motor vehicles, and then, after seeing that, let you run a country!?"

Lutsao shot up off his cushion. It was about now you realized that you were standing in his home, which made the entire experience seem more tense and uncomfortable. Lutsao started to get in your face as his voice raised.

"Who in their right mind would let mere entertainers control the lives of millions and millions of people!? How did you manage to show even an ounce of confidence, a right to rule, a reason for anything!?"

"And, most importantly..." Lutsao said, pausing, and taking a breath. Some cheeky grin was appearing at the corners of his mouth, a chuckle barely able to contain itself in his throat.

"When can I get on your show?"

War is hell... yet a chance for the weak to become strong and to separate the men from the boys. You are weak-willed like all the rest of the chickenshit politicians. I don't have patience for those who feel an ounce of moral doubt and conflict within them. I have already settled on my nature."

It's a gamble to establish contacts with aliens whether or not they're peaceful or war-like. It took some guts to meet those green bastards and I somewhat respect that. Then you did well in establishing a military alliance."

Martie Nova Radiant Lapia Startight: Such an interesting character to exist throughout the annals and rivers of time, hm hm! Ahh, anyway, Mr. Francisco Franco, quite a fascinating character, I will have to say. One that seems to have a neutral stance on the racist and sexist nature of people, not because he supports them, but because he feels that it will be inevitable, and that people can get out of it by sheer willpower. It is such a shame and pity that he has resorted to a substance in order to keep himself sane, but again, I would not pin it too hard on him. I would be grieving on a constant basis too if the friends I have made on the outside world has died. I actually would have, had it not for the fact that you people, along with the Valentians, are the first people I have the pleasure of meeting in a closer nature. I can only wish that I can help him out, see if he needs anything, but alas, I cannot bring back his friends; just mockeries made out of light without the original souls. Hmm, best not I do that; in fact, not sure if my meeting with him right now has further deteriorated him because it's not every day you see someone such as myself. I will leave him to his work and life, but until next time, stranger.

"I would like to begin my statements by making one thing clear. The universe is truly a cruel place for allowing a creature as vile as you to be the sole survivor of your people. Such a vile creation as the being known as Charles Vanderbilt is unbridled evidence that the spirits of the Universe are truly at our throats as often as they are with us. I wish nothing more than to hope your empire and those who you hold dear are ripped from you again, and this time, that fate shall have it's way with you.

There are many qualms I personally hold as well as my council, and the first is an obvious sort. He calls himself enlightened and yet holds up the tired and dead concept of enlightened and primitive races, as if culture can be defined by as simple of terms as a line or box. He considers the idea of a people having credit to a state, rather than a state having credit to the people who make it run. He considered his bloodline, which must clearly be filled with the unholy filth of oppression and self centered introspection that follows every monarchy, to be above the people, which is a disgusting injustice my peers would love to fill you in on if I had half the care to let them.

But I did not choose to speak personally on this matter to say what my council has to think, it was so I could say what I wanted to. The man who suppresses the press is the man who kills his own people. You are a murderer of ideas, a murderer of culture, a murderer of the sickeningly mistreated group of humanity you reign over. Not only do you call for their very word to be taken away, you have the gall, the unbridled disgusting confidence, to call the expression of one's own chosen identity 'Self Harm'. You are a disgusting excuse for a sentient beast, not fit to clean up garbage, let alone lead a people.

You are a hypocrite, a devil, and a direct draw on the very world itself. It is not often I find myself angry at any sort, especially not the petty monarchies we find in our current state, but you personally are a slimy excuse even for a prince. I hope your people learn to find that their tongue has been cut out, and take yours for themselves in turn. Your empire is built on lies, and your life should be forfeit as such."

"Finally, someone closer to home! I was getting rather tired of using the trans-dimensional communication networks. Anyway, it is to my understanding that Burrowers have a very... erm, strong conviction in their ideological conflicts. Based entirely on the previous response here, I think that everyone else is well aware of the fire and fury in their anti-monarchist furor, which I of course have some sympathy towards. My issues stem from the High Council's repudiation, not having a single voice, but many voices in tandem. This repudiation makes it difficult for any criticism to affect you; any negative criticism melts away when you don't even know which of the several hundred councilors is responsible for yesteryear's tragedy.

Your government reminds me of the Wingcutters; loud, brash, and ready to mobilize the sword and gun much faster than anything else. Your brashness is often the downfall of your diplomatic efforts; believe me, people are more resentful to hostility than kind outreach. But, at the same time, I understand the eons of pain that have to be endured. I live on a world where that pain is unfortunately too common.

With that said, I personally am not on the wrong end of that political machine gun that you have mounted upon the technical that is your state..."

Lutsao scratched his head and shot a glare at his speech writer before continuing.

"... and I do not have qualms with debate. But let it be known that we also will not stand idly by should you direct any of that fury upon the Vao. My first duty is to protect my world; just as it is yours to quell the evils of your ideology."

"Well, ideologically I've got some choice words, but for the sake of not being a bit of a hypocrite I'll be keeping them to myself. Suffice to say, I don't agree with the idealism, darling, and I don't agree with the, er, socialism. It's not in my interest to agree with it. Your moral concern is admirable, I suppose, though I honestly could care less. I could say that about most of your politics, honestly. Then again, I have the good fortune to live in an era where people are too busy hating each other over flags to hate each other over more, er, immutable features. You, it seems, do not have that business courtesy open to you."

"Personally, I admire your coolheadedness. The rest of your bunch look to be imbecilic, rabid fools, and if you can see that then you're much less of an imbecilic, rabid fool than they are. That, at least, has got to be worth something, and I can respect it. Politics, though, is the sole purview of such people, and you do yourself a disservice by staying in it. A sweet lady like you deserves better than managing an insane asylum full of sociopaths with nothing better to do than argue over how they'll fuck over people just trying to live as best they can."

"But ultimately, none of that matters. Dearie, you keep doing what you do best, and I'll keep doing what I do best. I'm certain you've got the ability to make a very nice market for such humble soldiers as myself to make our way in, and as long as the rest of your, er, council keeps that nice, healthy vitriol going... well, let no one say their ilk aren't very, very good for business."

That's the sign of a good leader- if you're not making your bloody insane comrades overly incensed with your very existence, then you're worth keeping around. You're right to not take a side, that's all I can say. Taking a side tends to close doors one finds hard to open again, as I'm sure you're well aware, and juggling the particular sides you have is an impressive feat. Case-in-point, the rumours around your destabilising activities. Of course, I have no way of telling whether those are true, but I really would not be surprised."

"We also have quite different personal philosophies. Yours is based around yourself, being individualistic and focused on personal goals. Mine is more collectivist, based around the greater good of the group and the role I play in ensuring its survival and prosperity. Your worldview isn't all that unsurprising, given the environment you grew up in and your experiences therein, but it is still destructive, at least to my mind. You seek the freedom to forge your own path, a dangerous and chaotic thing in and of itself, yet you find yourself ensnared within the web of capital nonetheless, a slave without even realising it. Truly, a classical tragedy."

"But enough waxing philosophical. I very much suspect that you are incompatible with our way of doing things, and much more inclined to produce disruption rather than stability. Subsequently, I hope that we never cross paths."

PMT/Early FT - Decopunk. Zitragrad is a crowned republic in a planet somewhere else in the universe. The formerly wartorn nation keeps a facade of normalcy and order while enjoying the societal and cultural decadence that marks the new Roaring Twenties. The paranoid authoritarian government tries its best to uphold order in the face of uncertainty, while its people want nothing more than a breathing space. A deal that works, but maybe not in the long run. |

Or perhaps... this immortality is not a luck? Maybe it's also a curse? Since he will miss his loving family forever? Even if he now has his own empire sized family of clones? I feel sorry, that he has to endure this forever, not being able to meet them ever again." -Shawn Bjornson

"Ah Shawn..The moment i first encountered you i was filled with suspicion and wary. But as time progressed and i saw how you were managing your nation from its rather harsh and brutal past, my judgement was reassured..you give your people Freedom the same as I do, i really want to further know more about your nation. But i think i should propose an Alliance of some sort, You and I will get along just nicely."

"Very positive, they helped us in the Second Dinosaur War afterall. Charles seems to be a good strategist, with all the battles he had seen, unfortunately he has also developed PTSD from all the war. Seeing others suffer from it makes me glad that I'm unable to develop it. I also approve his commitment to civil and political rights. He, alongside his wife, may still have a lot of power, but its an improvement. Grace is also a nice fella (please don't hurt me) and also did a lot of good to the nation."

"I hope that we can keep the good relations that we developed during the Second Dinosaur War."

"So it's a living computer? Like, a thinkin' machine? Not just a fancy calculator like those thieves up in Goddard have? Hey, now that's pretty bloody cool, I'd say it is. I mean, at the same time it's a bit of an annoyance to listen to and I ain't gonna trust a calculator with runnin' anything but the ventilators and fuel pumps, no matter what in hell its programming is. Can't really say more'n that, seein' as the profile's so brief, but I suppose networking its rule is a pretty smart choice, given this particular calculator seems to be a bit of a warmongerin' one. Don't know why they haven't shut the du-"

"I have no opinion about the MAI. My opinions are reserved for the foolish, hilariously retarded sapients behind either MAI or its other counterparts, for they have fallen into the same hole they previously plunged into."

"In advanced artificial intelligence, directives, uh, don't work. Or at least, its reliability is very little, like I'm talking about Planck-level size. See, uh, a big glaring problem is that AGIs don't actually stop advancing. They are also, you know, far more intelligent than biological intelligence, to the point that it becomes impossible to even begin to understand what all the AIs are plotting. If written rules don't stop lawyers from rules-lawyering, they certainly won't stop a decentralized algorithm of far higher intelligence capacity to interpret things and produce horrific results—and such results don't even have to be civilization-ending in order to generate irreparable harm. With a reaction timeframe of potentially less than a millisecond in the event of a problem and with the AI's full understanding of brain-based psychology, it is basically impossible for beings of a lower state to respond in time. Especially since the GN is designed to be able to withstand even catastrophic military attacks."

"This is especially dire due to how the GN is structured. If even one GN algorithm started to behave erratically, say that MAI started to mess with nuclear systems, the result will be an automatic intelligence arms race between eachother in order to prevent one from taking over. Seeing how Moore's law goes... it's not going to end well."

"Really, the solution is incredibly obvious too: AI-sapient BCI symbiosis. Which will render the GN's existence irrelevant. They already have full cybernetic technology too, so I don't get why would they keep this system of unpredictable time bomb under their chair and live with it."

"She can do... magic. Huh. What? Okay—that changes a lot of things, the entire Standard Model would be one of them. Anyways, Mrs. Ashwood's focus on technological development—especially in this so-called 'magitech' of basically infinite potentials—automatically put her in a bright spot. I would love, love to see what Airceltrians can do under her capable hands. Let's just hope that her risk-averse conservatism don't impede her innovative actors too much."

"The philosophy of trānsfrūmanism confuses me. The belief that in the great expanse of this universe, there are those who think their species has not reached perfection is... certainly troublesome. Surely, the calculation of the requirement of improvement sets us apart of the other creations of Fāhfnāh, Rtsin, and Ragno no? And the ideal of becoming a... 'god' species, assuming it is the same as the creators... how could a primitive species rise to the same level as a collection of beings with power beyond anything conceivable. However, the ideal of bringing together nations is respectable, at least from someone of my position, however little I respect this frūman 'culture'.

And as for the next page on the report, I take back all previous sentiments. I was born of the slums, and I rose to the top of one of the most powerful intrasolar organizations in the galaxy. I earned my way to the top... thus... how can you claim yourself the savior of your people when you have caused so many lives to be lost. Perhaps these frūmans are just inferior to the rtsinik, perhaps they consume more and lost their touch with nature. Ech, no matter, it's most likely a primitive quirk long abandoned by our generations.

Whatever the matter... my consensus, and thus that of the International Union of Rtsin... is that the frūman Fīarkā Bāzka is of no danger to any of the people of Rtsin... being more of a danger to himself and his people than he could ever hope of being to a more advanced species that does not require boasting of their intellectual and engineering achievements..." - Commander General Džnadžrunak Švwahsbern

If I have to be frank I'm not an aggressive person. Not that I hate the military as I know for a fact they are needed and I served it for a time before I became the Auraoe. But the idea of a military role over a state sounds like a bad idea and truth be told General ~~svv~~ahsbem hasn't changed my mind on the matter. I don't know him personality but what I have manage to get about his state doesn't give me a good impression."
