As opposed to the real life where Japan made friends with Germany first, forcing China to take the side of whoever it was that wasn't Japan's friend, in this world, it was Nationalist China who became Germany's ally in the second Great War. In turn, Hatsunia -tl's equivalent of Japan- made friends with the US instead.

That's not entirely true. The first Drules to be encountered by humans belonged to a pacifist polity. The Third Kingdom -which the Commonwealth is fighting- is not pacifist by any means.

AN: While every resource -and all of the economy- of Liagolas is controlled by 'The Dominion' -which functions as its government, among other things, Liagolas doesn't have a communist economic system as it developed independently from the western philosophical process that led to its creation.

So... there's that!

A couple of things:

While the Commonwealth was glad of the existence of the Confederation at first, cooperation and diplomatic friendship did not last long between the two polities as ideological differences between the xenophile and egalitarian Confederation and the authoritarian organisation of the Commonwealth that, while not xenophobic, did not view the relationships held between Humans and other species of the Confederation well.

Interspecies prejudice can be difficult to get rid of, I can relate. I mean, sure, I can be as inclusive as you can get, but even I would be a little wary to be standing besides the Covenant. Also, I think the sentence is a bit of a run-on, or is missing some words. I did not mean to play teacher, but I could not read it without getting lost in the middle. I might rewrite it like this, just as a suggestion! ♥

While the Commonwealth was glad of the existence of the Confederation at first, cooperation and diplomatic friendship did not last long between the two polities due to the ideological differences between the xenophile and egalitarian Confederation, against the authoritarian organisation of the Commonwealth which, while not xenophobic, did not view the relationships held between Humans and other species of the Confederation well.

To properly overhaul the military, the Commonwealth lifted compulsory military service and replaced the all-draft military to a fully professional, volunteer and paid defense force.

That sounds pretty nice, but I can only hope that they have the funds and means to pay them. Not all the mercenaries are gold-diggers are movies and TV shows make them out to be; some of them stayed with the country they were hired or are fighting for. Hopefully this paid defense force will have people like Bartolomeo Colleoni who does not force a paycheck on you and fights till his death.

* Bartolomeo Colleoni was an Italian condottiero, who became captain-general of the Republic of Venice. I think I have also heard of another Portuguese (or maybe he was an Italian all along) back in my Social Studies class who was a mercenary but stayed with Venice. It was something about how overreliance on mercs can be dangerous, but hey, if this works for Commonwealth, why not!

For BN, just a word of warning that you might not want to use the Overview / Wiki factbook's numbers for history; I have yet to update the years and all the smaller bits. ^^;

The two Koreas went to war against in 2003, agitated by China and Japan who basically used them as their way to stick one to the other. While North Korea wanted the reunification of Korea under its terms and China wanted to occupy all of Korea because of muh historical protectorate, Japan and South Korea only wanted to repel the Sino-Korean invasion. It comes as no surprise therefore, that South Korea ended up unifying the Peninsula.

In March of 1988 the four ships constructed as part of the Exodus Initiative arrived at their destination, a spatial anomaly located within the Oort Cloud. This anomaly revealed itself to be a natural wormhole, albeit one unstable. This instability would lead to the disappearance of three out of the four ships as all were propelled through it while the wormhole collapsed. Two of the vessels' whereabouts remain unknown to this day. One ship, The Mayflower was discovered to have been ejected nearly two centuries in the future in the general vicinity of the Vrek system with evidence to suggest that the crew turned on itself, killing and cannibalizing eachother. The Speedwell was the only ship to survive with the ship emerging in the year 2020 and being within reasonable distance of a habitable stellar body.

If there's one thing about Synnia that I'd just learnt, there's a martial membership system. Not only is there a membership but there six tiers to them as well as three special membership types, with prices increasing as you ascend tiers, ranging from C$15,000,000 to C$100,000,000,000 a year. In our timeline, there are over thirteen million millionaires across the world. With the world that you've crafted and just taking into account the Synnian Isles themselves, I have a good feeling that your own number of millionaires outnumber the OTL's number of millionaires. I like how balanced they are and how the bundles are representative of their chess counterpart's roles. For example, the bishop represents a fast collection of forces that are designed to end a war before you even realize it, similar to how bishops can traverse a great distance on a chess board and can knock out a king if the opposing player isn't vigilant. If there's one thing I'm curious about and I apologize if I didn't see this detail written but I wonder how many of each bundle you can give out, is it equal to the number of chess pieces on a chess board (Only two king bundles are given out)?

Ah, well firstly the membership services aren't exactly direct Synnia-Foreign party agreements. Haukner & Kahn (now Haukner & Co.) is technically independent from the Synnian federal government though still maintains close-ish ties with the Synne Industries corporation, the tandem governing system makes this a bit of a mess but it's more or less its own thing. As for the memberships, they're mostly there to cater to governments and the especially affluent. Comparing this to real life, the United States Navy has an annual budget of roughly 161 billion USD and fields 11 fleet carriers. Haukner & Co.'s KING membership provides 8 carriers, very many guided missile cruisers and destroyers, and half an air force to boot, coming in at a total of roughly 190 billion USD and with far more advanced technologies mind you. Sverse maritime republics, the Panamanian League and Galapagos for example will be the primary customers for these large bundles while smaller quasi-nations such as the Silra group and various Rockwell city states are also there to get a piece of the smaller bundles. It's more or less a substitute for a proper defense force in terms of structure and equipment, purchasing parties need only supply the manpower, though training is still required.

As to the millionaire situation, it usually doesn't matter when it comes to the memberships due to the aforementioned examples of desired customers. That being said, Synnia's place in the world with the unnaturally high amount of business leaders and 'Human Singularity' situation probably means you'll know at least one person in your neighborhood whose got their hands on a Haukner & Co. guided missile cruiser.

For the naming and what it means, as with many things I chose it just because I thought it sounded cool at the moment, though you've done a pretty good job at interpretation. BISHOP membership is the first tier to have the rapid deployment and air-superiority bundles after all. I don't plan on adding any real limits as of now because, well, it's gonna be a while until I set up the proper storefront. But who knows? We've got until the heat death of the universe before I'll be able to finish all my factbook reduxes :}.

The Armed Forces of Bloodshade is divided into three branches. The Army which is tasked with running planetside operations, the Navy which is tasked with running space operations, and the Special Arcane Forces. As with most interstellar militaries, the line between the former two branches is extremely muddy, with the navy being tasked with both transporting the army in cases of interplanetary expedition and -presumably- aid them in planetary incursion initiatives through orbital bombardment and information gathering through a bird eye view. The most impressive thing about it however, is neither the gargantuan size of the military nor the high number of ships currently in use. In case of total war, Bloodshade can draft up to 57% of its total population... which kinda scares me.

The current Liagolas of the Dominion is suspected by outsiders to be presently represented by a body no more than twenty or so in age. In actuality it is all of us. This one knows we are all Liagolas, and Liagolas is all of us. This one, then, approves of the choice. We all approve of the choice, and we all act on the choice. This is good. If the mouth speaks for longer and with a more soothing tone then the body will react well, and other bodies will harken to it. Other bodies are uncoordinated and weak. The Dominion is toned and strong. If the Dominion is to sugar its words then the others will respect it, and the others will listen to it. This one thinks that if the Dominion is to keep to this path then soon there may not be others. This one thinks this is good.

Aha, character analysis! One of the things I am good at, or at least pretend to be good at! Anyway, let's get to it. Evaluation on Magnus Arnold, Grand Marshal of the Commonwealth. So... he reminds me of a certain Lord from the Halo franchise, but this is not a mark against your character. Just thought I would note this down. So, a few things I have learned: the fact that he is currently serving as the Grand Marshal in a 36-year war. That was impressive in both a commendable way, and as a sad way. Commendable because the man has dedication to raise the standards and quality of life around him. Sad because the poor man has been on it for 36 years and I am sure it is not his choice either. Imagine having to go through logistics and strategy constantly for 36 years. That is going to wear on someone very quickly. Hell, you can see it in his face! Also, very tall dude, I like.

Also this: Arnold joined the Commonwealth Military at the age of 20, originally in pursuit of a better quality of life that only military service can bring to the citizens of the Commonwealth. It must be the gourmet MREs that he was attracted by, hehe. Jokes aside and no lie, as someone who was drafted OOCly as part of Singapore's conscription thing, if there are no wars, your life in the military is pretty decent. You get free food, some free stuff (you need to buy with credits, but it's not technically with your money), accommodation, and the like, in exchange for freedom and regimentation! I imagine that life as a soldier in the Commonwealth Military will be better thanks to the much more advanced tech, though the trade-off being that the poor man has to fight an actual war, not just self-defense like me. So, as he has been around for so long, he definitely knows surviving!

Their first war against the 'Drule' race was actually against the pacifistic and isolationist 'Fifth' Kingdom, which had split off from the Third Kingdom, one which is oddly antagonistic to the Fifth Kingdom's beliefs. It was kind of lucky mankind encountered the Third Kingdom first because the Fifth Kingdom was actually the more powerful of the two states, meaning a war against them would have likely ended in a human defeat. The defeat of the Fifth Kingdom indirectly led to a technological renaissance within the CoM, which allowed the Third Kingdom to be swiftly defeated, in contrast to the long and drawn-out conflict that was the first-encounter war.

AN: During the nuclear war of 1999, 4,000,000 people were killed with nuclear armaments, leaving only 1% of the world's total population left on Earth. This amount of nuclear exchange caused the planet to actually shift to an 1100-day (Gregorian Calander) year. The number of bombs it would take to sufficiently slow down the Earth/move its orbit to that point would likely be in the millions and... yeah, I can see why only 1% of the world survived.

The largest Jewish community in Wexas outside of Houston can be found in the settlement of Sarjent, itself a post-apocalyptic 'restoration' of the "Old-World" settlement of Sargent. While 97% of its population is Jewish, that doesn't mean much because the whole settlement has only 12 non-Jew denizens.

I learned that showing any skin "below the belt" is a pretty serious taboo. Wexans don't even like to see ankles exposed. Interestingly, though, one shouldn't expect floor-length dresses: men and women tend to both dress in the same cowboy fashion of animal-hide pants and ten-gallon hats. Some Wexans do wear dresses, but the factbook seems to suggest this is not standard fashion and is done by those who personally desire to appear "feminine."

Ninja'd.
