Not a crime, but you will end up on a watchlist. Conspiring to overthrow the government via violent revolution is still technically publishable by death too.

Not illegal for various reasons. For one, we haven't decided on where should cars be driving on which side of the road, so there is no wrong side to drive on so to speak.

And even if there was, you'd get away with it pretty easily since law enforcement's a bit....lax with minor offenses.

Speaking of cars, how about Grand Theft Auto? (the actual crime, not the game)

About the crime of car thefts, grand theft auto, it is a crime of robbery or theft, depending on how it was carried out. It is a theft like any other, and is punishable by 3 years in prison without parole, if the use of violence was not employed against the victim. It is robbery if they used violence to carry out the larceny, then, the penalty can vary from 5 to 10 years, also without parole. But if the victim was murdered, then it becomes a felony murder and therefore, the penalty is death.

Not a crime. You don't need a special permit for that. Whoever is driving it does need a driver's license, and there are several safety and consumer protection regulations in place, but there is no specific permit required to operate a food truck or open a food stand.

Depends on which leader and what sort of favours we're talking about. If they're sexual favours that's totally fine, Tangatarehua is a polyamorous culture anyway. If you're talking about financial favours like kickbacks or bribes then a Prime Minister could be looking at impeachment and 10 years in prison, a Rangatira would likely be removed from office and stripped of any honours and an Empress... well an intern wouldn't ever gain access to the Empress in the first place.
