And real natbollibsocdemnanarchofascism hasn't been tried yet.

In other words, it's one thing to have a certain ideology and seek to address problems you see in the world, but another to attack people who don't fit it because of [X] while doing so.

oh hell no.

This is a strawman. Anti-racists, anti-fascists, and feminists do not victimize straight white men, despite what racists, fascists, and chauvinists would want you to believe.

they have used this strawman for a long time

Don't fall for that nonsense.

Let's not turn this into an actual political thread. There's a place for this and it's called NSG Chernobyl exclusion zone.

To add, it was really handy that I often had to write reports about the Colonization of the Americas or the conceptual history of the "Indians" while thinking about how the cat-people could evade wholesale genocide. The same applies to Tohorin. I feel the mix of stress I had before actually made me less lethargic to think about ideas.

In contrast, The Saucer Pilots has written itself because UFO lore is halfway into outer-space on it's own.

BTW, what's the hardest thing about writing about your OTP? Does describing their emotional anguish come easy? A lot of people seem to make suffering too melodramatic in F7 but you balance that out.

eyyy thanks. although now i'm remembering how horrendously old the first political compass is by now. probably going to have to remake it at some point, though thankfully i won't have to change too much - maybe a third of the squares at most. then again i'll probably end up wanting to rewrite and re-illustrate the ones that are still technically lore-accurate.

I use GIMP and ended up making a map after 5 hours of painfully staring at a screen (and of course using planet map generators to get the tracable). Does that count?
