Depends on the province. In some provinces, it's not a crime. In other provinces, not having a license for the vehicle (and other licenses for its weaponry) may incur heavy fines and the confiscation of the vehicle. In other provinces, it's a fine, confiscation of the vehicle, and jailtime. The federal government is trying to stop the provinces from having laws of the latter two types.

What was burned in the leaves? Was anybody or anything hurt? Likely not a crime, but if something was damaged you could be fined or arrested.

Breaking into somebody's house and dancing naked, then proceeding to throw canisters of tear gas at everyone in the room.

I have no idea what you mean by that. If you transform someone into a countryball somehow, though, I guess you'd get charges for mutilation, and given this specific context, likely more than 40 years.

A suspicious black vehicle runs you over, at high speeds, next time you exit the home. If you are not dead, you get shot a few times by a black-suited agent who steps out of the car. Have fun with assassination.

It is not a crime per se.

However, if instead of simple cursing, the person says some things that could be understood as grooming a minor, then it would be another story... You could face more than 30 years in jail because of that.

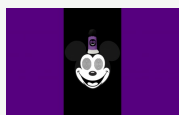

How do you punish child sexual abuse (pedophilia)?

There's no technical law that punishes it, but the more morally inclined Merry-men would probably have you sentenced to having your genitalia sawn off before being beaten and burned alive. Otherwise, if they don't attract attention to themselves, they get away with it and even have a small community among themselves. Just mind all the vigilantes who would probably attack them, Mary herself especially included (having been a victim of childhood sexual violence herself, if she had a line to draw, it would absolutely be there.)
