The low-effort meme posters are winning bc the high-effort ones are all COWARDS who give up because they got 400 words instead of 400 paragraphs.

That's fair and I agree, actually. There's a difference between getting things wrong and picking the most basic of stuff, and getting disappointed because of a lack of essay.

I don't think I have ever expected an essay from someone, just mentioning a little line or two to show that you've read is cool. I might have been crazy in the past with asking people for an efforted post, then I remember ... I survived the Anna Kendrick GIFs, I can survive this.

Then again, I have moved to greener fields and pastures for the most parts involving effort, even though F7 is still my home. ♥◻

Which I definitely understand. I appreciate the high effort posts, I'm just a big fan of getting to the point. It's why my F7 things are a paragraph at most, but my shortposts typically have an explanation behind what I mean.

Typically, when I reply to AN type threads, I put in effort based on a could of things: how much the person above me wrote and how much I would like the person below me to write for me. If I see someone who wrote out a detailed reply than it would probably annoy them if I replied with one word. And if I leave a paragraph, the next person might want to put in more effort as well.

But also sometimes I'm tired or something so can't be bothered to write a lot, but I do try most times.

Totally. I'm just saying that the amount of effort put in should not only be determined by AN, but also by how much effort you want BN to put in as well.

Honestly I do this because even though my posts are much higher quality than most other people on f7, I still get shat on by people who write 6 sentences and 3 essays because I told them anime was overused once. I don't understand how I came to deserve such a treatment, especially during the times I was so new to the forum. I don't know how copy-pasting a cytus character's image with a couple of formats and 3 sentences is considered "high quality". Maybe I am stupid, and maybe I am a horrible person, but did I really deserve people calling me a paranoid jackass whenever 20 year old germany nation with 6-7 billion citizens whom I will not name starts posting after all my posts ruining my f7 experience? Just because I had "low effort shitposter" in my signature doesn't mean it was a legitimate queue to start harassing me behind my back. Maybe they should stop telling me to die on the "F7 discord" and touch some grass. Maybe they could even focus on people that are legitimately low-effort trolls instead of focusing on this 15 year old. Jesus Christ.

I'm sorry, I want to be nice but when I get treated like this it is very hard for me to have faith in humanity. Like how Azur Deutschland and I had an agreement to ignore eachother but then proceeded to try and cancel me on that shitty discord with their other friends. I'm not trying to be rude or anything but is it really unreasonable to be angry at people who repeatedly insult me on the discord and proceed to ban me for no reason at all? Like I mean this is literally cyberbullying. I didn't even hate japanese cartoons before this, it's now ruined all anime for me, because of these few people who were shits to me. I now post relatively high-effort, but I can't help to stare in their direction whenever I see them say something hateful on the discord. Like bruh. Then I TG'd Vaderland to stop insulting me and they thought I was asking for sympathy. I don't want sympathy. I do want to be on f7 normally.

You mean cue, not queue. A cue is a signal to proceed. A queue, on the other hand, is a FIFO (first-in-first-out) data structure.

"Fully automated luxury gay space communism" is what I remember posting. You can't expect someone who came onto the forums a few days ago to post huge substance-filled 6-paragraph legal essays on the virtues of Feyrisshirean communism.

Yeah, and I made that mistake a couple days into the forum. I owned up to the mistake, I haven't shamed an aesthetic ever since and the screencaps are completely false. Nothing was capitalized. You were also definitely on the discord when I joined, because when I sent my friend East Asia and the Pacific Islands to enter and tell me what you said, he reported seeing you active. and on the server.

And you were throwing insults at me like the rest of them from the safety of Discord, without moderation intervention.

Like it or not, you did make my time on f7 a lot worse, with your "high quality" posts and ranting at people who didn't post novels regularly. Nevermind, the only person you targeted was me. Only person, with the exception of others who literally flamed and harassed you, which I didn't.

Bro, I was not in the F7 discord server when you joined. Stop trying to act as if I'm the fucking devil here. I left that dogshit server because of how toxic it was way before you ever joined. My discord tag is "Azur". Quit trying to pin the blame of other assholes on me.

So... hey, to steer a little clear of what I feel is a very hot room, figured I would thought of this as a bit of a cliché, me included:

Overexplanation. I know, you need all the lore and worldbuilding you can get, and that is okay, I do that all the time. I have so many details at times, I know that feeling when you started writing a few words, then it snowballed into every single little details about the bullets the guns use.

Now and then, I do feel that we can and should get away with not explaining some bits, and explain it as a "mystery / magic / exercise left to the reader." Think of it like Star Wars before the sequels (the Force, or the midichlorians). A bit of an overused example, yes, but at times, it does not have to be hard sci-fi. Add a bit of magic and mysticism into your mix! ♥

Think of it like Star Wars before the sequels (the Force, or the midichlorians). A bit of an overused example, yes, but at times, it does not have to be hard sci-fi. Add a bit of magic and mysticism into your mix! ♥

With the WDS I personally follow the rule of "For whatever mystery you explain, create at least two more things that won't be explained".
