Late to the NS2 talk so hey, you know how you have your own regions here for RP purposes?

Yeah, too bad. You're getting put on a random region, and there's not a thing you can do (until the much later update).

And I'm pretty sure that update happened long after most of the playerbase abandoned NS2 and went back to the original.

(Also never forget that Jolt tried to convince Max to shut down the original game and redirect people to NS2)

Self-reporting isn't really common enough to be a cliché tbh. (Assuming you're talking about people reporting their own rule-breaking posts in moderation)

They're probably referring to the latter (eg usually along the lines of "I know it breaks the rules, but... it was justified").

Yeah and like I said, I don't think it's common enough to be a cliché.

Doing a quick search in moderation for "self report" only brings up 22 results and "self reporting" brings up only 17 results.

I can't really call something as uncommon as that a 'cliché' tbh.

Another cliché: Users giving out their ages, first names, even surnames, the city where they live, and other personal details. It's dangerous; people could doxx you with that info, you know?
