"The Hystarian King seems to make use of compromise extensively as a style of rule. I see that his governance is influenced, while not as greatly as administrations under conventional Western-styled democracies, by the people, almost to a whim, where individuals instead of parties are highly encouraged to voice out their own unique opinions.

Do not be mistaken, as such a ruling style has been adopted in good faith; my only reservation would be that national unity in Hystaria might find itself having to strike an extremely delicate balance, where governance might be disrupted with a clash between a potentially-limiting scope of clashing individual opinion, and the collective public good."

We both are against racism, we work for the people of our nations and we are usually criticized as being dictators. "Huh, at first glance he seems like one of the tough end leaders - if we had someone like that as a cat, they would most likely be a warrior. Judging from his family, he has a quite happy personal life - ehh, I don't really want to tear old wounds again... Anyways, let's just say that I approve him tolerating the other faiths, while also strictly managing the unity with his own StarClan. When it comes to leadership, I kind of can draw parallels between me and him - while I intend to keep the strengthened position of a clan's leader, I want to cut back some of the more restrictive policies by Shortstar and her group. As long as he stays a benevolent ruler, I have little to no qualms with him. I also like his care for environment - it means, that he is more aware of seemingly small mistakes by twolegs (humans)."

She's a warrior, might not be the strongest, but nonetheless labeled a warrior. One curiosity I hold towards her is the fact that she keeps to herself and hails from a different faction, it only makes me wonder how she will place above the rest against the other two.

Surely with the bitter relationship between the two factions I feel as if it wouldn't go well. Like if a Rapturian were to try and rule here." -The first king

I don't think I'd give my wholehearted support for the King of corpses, but neither to that Rapture fellow and his underwater goons. And I ain't gonna encourage any of my friends and family to fight for the corpse king fellow here or any one of the two sides. Guess he means well despite the creepy, unsettling name he's got but then again I'm not enthusiastic to support him."

Either way, I don't really understand what this "navy" is, as water combat for us is mostly mastered only by former RiverClan, but he seemed to do a good job at running it, before he became a leader of the clan. Just as I have noticed the pattern, twolegs too have passed down leader titles to their offsprings, but it is weird that he doesn't want his position, and would retire if someone would defeat them - I have simply seen too much power hungry cats and other beings both there, and in the forest, that I just can't believe that such a mindset can even exist. However, if his goals are nobler and higher, then I can't really complain, as power corrupts. You don't quite put Crimsonclaw to shame when it comes to war, but you are kinda close. I also understand why he keeps his weapon below his sheets - a man like him is bound to attract some killers. Either way, have a good day."

Très bien alors, only the strangest thing I have heard this week. Well what do I think about this cat's politics, from the little I understand about it, I find it interesting and unusual. This cat and others like it don't seem to have a well or complete understanding of Man's ideas and things, such as monarchy, the many religions, and boats apparently. This cat seems to be more action-driven and unliking of the current system of repression from the current ruling clan of cats and their policies. Which is something I can understand, having your old ways of life disrupted and repressed by semi-foreign invaders and outcasts is something I could...Oh, why am I still talking on this? This cat and its clans that I know nothing about other than the small strange reports that I can't trace back to anyone official. et je parle d'un chat sauvage comme s'il s'agissait d'un sénateur. "Authoritativeness in the State is often an avoided, or even a derogatory phrase in many well-meaning established institutions, especially with our neighbours. But if we may assess certain authoritative systems such the system adopted by the Emperor-King of the Alpes, democratic processes have shown to reduce state efficiency; where is the public good in that?

Here is a Head of State, within an absolute monarchy that is able to enact the right policies effectively with a relevant advisory, directing progress in society such that his people will not fall into decadence. For that I salute to him."
