568 monkeys were spread on the plane that made up their ground. The plane that held the planets, the sun, the black holes, and the many galaxies whose gravitational pull warped its fabric, was ripped apart near the Earth. A horrid sound, seemingly spread from the hole itself and travelled on particles foreign to this dimension, smashed into the eardrums of so many monkeys. Many of them scream, yet are unable to hear them, and many more lay prone, bleeding from the ears and unable to process that much pain. Many others whose hearing was spared soon begged for their eyes to be taken, for they saw in the sky a most monstrous entity, with parts tangling into each other and appendages on appendages. The figure was thin and slender, but long in height, and its top was capped with a sharp tentacle that stretched and propelled itself into the surface of the earth. The friction itself caused many near the penetrating limb, but sadly not near enough to die instantly, to suffer from the influx of energy as their meat melted off the bone. What can be called a face, if only because it is the only flat surface on the twisting mass of limbs, had a gaping tear darker than blackholes and emitting all sorts of radiation that rained down upon the poor survivors. Small particles, smaller than the quarks or strings, ripped through the DNA of every monkey and caused large tumors to instantly spawn where the flesh was hit. And as the monkeys lay wriggling in pain, the being spoke.

"YOU WHO STAND, I COMMEND YOU! FOR YOU HAVE PROVEN YOURSELF A HARDY BUNCH! YOU, WHO FACE DESTRUCTION! AND FOR THIS, I OFFER YOU A REWARD! I WILL RETURN THAT WHICH WAS LOST TO YOU: YOUR DEAD! YOUR DEATHS AMUSED ME ONCE, AND IT SHALL AMUSE ME AGAIN! COME! GREET YOUR FALLED!"

From the depth of the graveyard came limbs, then head, then torso, then legs, and finally the whole body. Or, rather, what was left, for the monkeys that came were rotted husks, without intellect or instinct, without hunger or thirst. They existed solely to roam the Earth, and they were good at that. They were even better at spreading diseases, diseases that were seemingly vanquished by modern medicine but now hold resistant that can kill before the vaccine can cure. The living dead had come back.

"ENJOY WHAT I HAVE GIVEN YOU! FOR I SHALL MAKE SURE YOU GIVE THANKS!"

The being left, and in its place, 1797 monkeys were trapped in chaos.
