Her debut album is out today, but I haven't heard anything from it yet. This is just from her singles she's released over the years.

God is an Astronaut-Forever Lost.

Haven't listened to these guys in a while. At least, not for longer then a brief moment. Brings back memories of them being the start of my major music exploration. They were one of the first Post-Rock bands I ever discovered, and from then on, I've gained a ton of new music. They are still great, at least with some songs, and I definitely need to buy some of their stuff at some point too.

You should. If you like them, I recomend Two Steps from Hell and Epic Score

I listened to some Two Steps from Hell before and I didn't really get into them. Dunno why. I don't know Epic Score, though.

God is an Astronaut-Loss.

One of my favorites. I dig the song when it kicks in. I mean, I like it anyway, but for some reason that parts bad ass.

I have to admit, it's pretty good. Especially at the 2 minute mark.

But you should at least try Protectors of Earth, Archangel, Immortal, and Heart of Courage berfore you give up on Two Steps.

The last 4 minutes is just very quiet ambient type of sounds, but it works, especially for an end of an album song. My favorite part is when it kicks in the second time. I just love Post-Rock songs, so, and this is the type of powerful Post-Rock song I dig. If you like powerful songs, and like that song, you may like some Post-Rock, and I know plenty I can share with you. I've decided that the most powerful rock songs I've ever heard have always been Post-Rock ones, and usually instrumental (because that's what Post-Rock tends to be).

And I will definitely give Two Steps from Hell more of a listen at some point.

I don't really know what your opinion on slow music is, because there's a fair amount of Post-Rock songs that are linear, or are just generally ambient post-rock. But there's a fair amount that isn't, too. I'll give you a few suggestions (And try not to get overly spammy)

Thanks! Those were all very good. I especially liked Sleepmakeswaves - Keep Your Splendid Silent Sun, and plan on listening to them in the future.

This is Epic Score. It is actually not that bad, as long as you like piano intros. Like me.
