The Air Domain has quite literally engineered their spaceships to be more like Rubik's Cubes than maximally-optimized machines; each vehicle possesses a significant number of functions that could be automated but have not been solely to occupy the crews attention on long voyages.

That the language is agglutinative (IC)

That the user is uniquely invested in her/his nation, to endow it with such a well-thought out, neverending WIP of a language. (OOC)

That I wish I were that clever, to make up and build up a language from deep deep principles like "characterised by fricative sounds, but smoothened by..."

Apparently he's not just a Denisovan, he's a capitalist Denisovan. At the very least, he knows what communism is, and that he doesn't like it.

In this timeline, Chad is governed by Mamadou Déby (rather than Mahamat), the son of the previous leader, Idriss Déby. He's politically aligned with both Mao Zedong and the Turkmen president, Gurbanguly Berdimuhamedow and is also a member of the ironically named "International League Of African Despots"

In 2000 the Waisnor Defense Party campaigned for the return of military conscription under the slogan "If you haven't served in the army, you're gay." They somehow managed to win a seat (not actually that surprising tbh).

If you want a more complete answer though, I learned AN is your typical meme nation about dictatorships. Everything down to the comical corruption, the dark thematics, the self inflation. Plus, the use an interesting portrait for their leader.

When I'm answering for nations that are largely based on real world countries as they are today, it's a little harder for me to find interesting facts. I chose to note YNs population because it mentions other fictional NS nations at the same time.

The major "Gods" the Timelords worship are the Menti Celesti. However, unlike most gods that are separate from humanity - or even reality itself, the Menti Celesti are (as the name implies) mentally connected to the time lords themselves. I could make some comparisons to the Chaos Gods of both Warhammer universes, but these Menti Celesti are much more unique than that. The very essence of Life and Time itself might be the "leaked out" dreams of Time Lords, and unlike the previously mentioned time lords, these Gods also include subjectively good forces like Life and Hope. Overall, a very unique take on a religion.

So, apparently in ye-olde days their history diverged from ours in the form of the British tribes possessing sufficient military might to send Roman expeditions very thoroughly packing, and this essentially started things ticking in a way that essentially lead to the Brits in their timeline functionally yoinking pretty much the entire planet.

Tribes taking over the world and fighting Romans, huh? I can relate.

The word "tribe" in the Caleshan context is quite deceptive, as each "tribe" has at the very least dozens of millions of citizens under its wing that are large enough to be nations in their own right. Their immense size and numbers are a contributing factor in the decentralized nature of their society.

Two important thing about the Albion Commonwealth, their equivalent to the British Empire: 1- It never transformed from the Kingdom of Great Britain into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and 2- A number of its cities likely have an "old-timey" name: York is Ebrauc, London is Londonium, Also, it appears the Atlantic Concordat is, contrary to my earlier thoughts, their stand-in for NATO.

The first major attempt to restore order in the Albanian Wastelands in the 22rd century likely began in 2177 when a peacekeeper contingent crossed the borders. The hostile environment -namely, the nuclear radiation- forced them to a halt only one hundred miles into Albania, and the peacekeepers retreated with six casualties.
